WAR "FILLERS"

THE Government war picture program, in all of its various forms and channels, seems addressed entirely at the short film components of the theatre program.

This is the apparent acceptance of a decided sort of limitation.

The limitation is both upon the individual production and its content, and upon the access to the screen. In some theatres, notably the double bill houses of which there are yet many, the place for shorts is acutely limited, if any.

So far, what is to be said on the screen for the cause of America in the war is being largely left to chance and whim. So far, aside from the volunteered and incidentally inspired effort of makers of entertainment features, no major address, no effort comparable in calibre to the screen's more important works, is being made.

The war as a story is no "filler".

TOWARD THE LIGHT

THE coming of military blackouts to Broadway, and all the coastal amusement areas, can remind us now of how much the amusement business is made of light.

It is mostly coincidence that the same man gave us the electric light that made "The Great White Way", and the motion picture, too. Despite popular misconception, the motion picture was not an electrical invention and was in no way dependent on electricity initially.

Entertainment for the masses in the leisure hours of night became both possible and practical only with the arrival of electrical illumination, safe, efficient, cheap.

Many a showman still functioning can remember when the footlights at the opera house used gas.

The bright lights are both symbol and function in the world of entertainment. Their impelling power is basic. The biologists have a word for it—"heliotropism"—meaning a turning toward the sun. Most every living thing does it, including the customers under the marquee.

PRINT CONSERVATION

A BLAZING white spot about the size of a postage stamp, in the aperture plate of the projector, contains and covers all there is to and of our flambouyant and expansive art and industry of the motion picture. Once upon a time in the years agone your editor did a piece about it under the title of "The Needle's Eye", just to give emphasis to the fact that a machine, the projector, and a man, the projectionist, stand ever efficient, ever diligent, at that keen sharp point of delivery, finally responsible.

Now in our world-at-war that incandescent focus, with its flood of lumens flowing through the film, has upon it a new responsibility and obligation that reaches out to the white heat of battle. This function of the flowing shadows of fiction and fancy for the diversion of the people ties through that fleeting film to the desperate facts of bomb and torpedo and firing line.

Rationing of the stuff that film is made of is upon us. That same nitro-cellulose which is film base, with a touch of this and that, mostly just more oxygen, is gunpowder.

Film begins, just as many of the explosives begin, with cotton fibers and nitric acid. Mostly both have come to be made from cotton "linters", which are just the fuzzy little short fibers that stick to the seeds when the cotton is ginned. Linters are cheap and convenient for processing.

We are getting tidings of priority allotments and film rationing ideas out of Washington now because motion picture film and gunpowder are in competition, in a sense, rather directly in fact.

WHAT the reduction in the film stock available may prove to be will be settled and announced in due season. Meanwhile, it is very clear, indeed, that a new efficiency, a new attitude of conservation, is to be required at the projection machine.

Film has been cheap and abundant and it has been lavishly used, even as newsprint paper and endless other materials of our luxuriously expansive and indulgent national economy. All that has been to the betterment of the media and the service of the public. Now the war has brought a new sort of economy of conservation, where desperate necessity takes over.

It is certain now that for most pictures, all the successful ones, prints are going to have to serve longer.

There is no physical or technological reason why they should not.

There have been figures saying that exhibition prints have a working life of about 50 runs. The actual experience of the industry today is that they average 90 runs per print. That takes care of the averaging effect of the archaic machines with worn sprockets and haywire adjustments. There are plenty of them and they need replacement, repair, adjustment.

The fact is that, with a mechanism in perfect condition, properly processed film and adequate attention, a motion picture film is about ten times better than the average results indicate. Using a projector in proper operating condition, with arc controls adequate, and normally processed prints, destruction tests on looped specimens of positive prints have given satisfactory screen result for from 800 to 1,000 runs.

That is a laboratory job, under closely controlled conditions. No theatre could duplicate it in practice. It does however indicate upper limits on a performance that can be approximated. The best projectionists in the well equipped theatres are today holding up the average against some heavy odds. Purchasing agents being what they are, it is the opinion of this observer that the machines could be in better order. Priorities may get in the way of rehabilitation and maintenance,

No Picture Ceiling

FILM rentals and theatre admissions are among the few items not covered by the over-all price ceiling announced Tuesday by Price Administrator Leon Henderson, to go into effect next month. With the press, and radio, motion pictures are specifically exempted by the Price Control Act of 1942. The exemptions also apply to exported pictures.

The order, however, will stabilize the prices of practically every material and commodity going into the production or exhibition of films at the highest prices at which sales were made by manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers in March. All theatre equipment is included.

Mr. Henderson's order was the first concrete step taken in Washington to put into effect the seven-point anti-inflation program submitted to Congress Monday by President Roosevelt.

While films themselves escaped price control, the companies and individuals in the industry would be hit by the President's recommendation to tax away all profits in excess of a "reasonable" amount, to be determined by Congress, and his demand that no individual be left with a net income of more than $25,000 a year.

The House Ways and Means Committee questioned Treasury officials on the President's recommendation for taxes to take all excess profits and to limit individual net income to $25,000 a year, but did not indicate that they would be incorporated in the tax bill now being written.

While demanding the control of prices, Mr. Roosevelt discouraged efforts to regulate labor, saying the situation was being stabilized by voluntary action of unions. He urged continuance of overtime pay for work in excess of 40 hours a week.

Pointing out that before the end of the year, spending for war purposes would reach a figure of $200,000,000 a day, the President declared that profits "must be taxed to the utmost limit consistent with continued production" and added that "this means all business profits—not only in making munitions, but in making or selling anything else."

Canada's Ceiling

"SPLENDID" is the word for the price ceiling plan devised by the Canadian government to regulate theatre and film prices in wartime, according to Abram F. Myers, general counsel of National Allied. Mr. Myers expressed satisfaction with what he described as the "elasticity of stabilization" as applied to the Canadian film trade.

Mr. Myers visited Toronto on Tuesday to study the Canadian price plan this week, and after conferences with the Wartime Prices and Trade Board officials and the National Council of Motion Picture Exhibitors declared that he was pleased to find that effective control was maintained over film contracts in the Dominion. After talks with Henry Falk, Barnett Laver, Thomas Walton and other Canadian independent theatremen, Mr. Myers commented that the plan appeared to be a very practical arrangement, fair to all branches of the industry.

Meanwhile, in Toronto, there was widespread belief along film row that U. S. film prices might yet be controlled by the Government. They pointed out that Harry Gordon, chairman of the Dominion Wartime Prices and Control Board was in Washington conferring on Government price orders. Unaffiliated theatre owners of Canada are reported to have pledged support, through Mr. Myers, to American independents if they drive for U. S. film rental controls.

Patent Pool

FILM sound system patents are one of the many parts of an international patent agreement by which the Bell Telephone System and its parent American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and the Radio Corporation of America seek to control the communications field, William H. Bauer, attorney for the Federal Communications Commission told the Senate Patents committee at Washington on Tuesday.

He cited agreements made in 1930 with German concerns by Electrical Research Products, Inc., Bell System affiliate, RCA Photophone, and 10 U. S. producers and distributors of sound motion pictures as an example of the international by-product patent pool. "The agreement covers the whole world," Mr. Bauer said.

UP from Rio de Janeiro comes word that Brazil, where various pictures of war significance, including typically "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" and "The Great Dictator", had been officially withheld, has now lifted the ban. That is part of the changing complexion of the political map.

It may be observed, too, that here in these United States there are considerable areas where pictures of that category enjoyed little circulation at the time of their release, a period when the order and extent of this nation's participation in the war was being determined.

Since there appears to be a considerable casting about for promising reissue product, this array of pictures might now be reexamined in the light of a new state of mind in some regions.

For what?

For the privilege of seeing American films.

The methods may differ; but this substantially is what occurs in Paris now, according to a United Press story from Vichy. The private theatres showing verboten American films are part of the vast, unquenchable "black market."

The films are old, but with sound. They are seen for about $1.10—double the admission at regular theatres. The private theatres usually feature bars.

Smuggling by the Germans of 1,600 reels of propaganda films was foiled by Argentine customs authorities last week in Buenos Aires harbor. They took the films from the Portugese steamship Serpa Pinto, raising speculation about cargoes of other Portugese boats.

Mistaken Identity

THE Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers should change its name, it was suggested this week by I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, Hollywood, who wrote Loyd Wright, president of the first organization, that communications addressed to it were reaching the Association.

Mr. Chadwick noted his organization was older, and suggested the newer group change its name, adding:

"If such confusion exists within the industry, there must be considerable confusion outside the industry, over the identity of our respective organization."

Producers with the Society release through major distributors; those with the Association, through independent distributors.

Mr. Chadwick's association received droves of letters, telephone calls, and other communications after the Society recently opposed the suggested changes in the consent decree.

Tabled

THE War Production Board in Washington admitted late Wednesday that Donald M. Nelson, director, had before him a plan for voluntary conservation of materials by the motion picture industry, under which there would be no need for an official Government priorities order. WPB said that such a plan had been submitted, but added that Mr. Nelson as yet had not found time to consider it.

Exhibitors asking about "Patriotism and Profits"

Now the insiders of the motion picture's war-and-government relations will be a-mulling the discussions of a decidedly executive meeting at midweek at the War Activities Committee offices in the Paramount Building in New York about "patriotism and profits".

The call came from the development of exhibitor feeling over the announcement last week that in sequel to a visit to Hollywood by Lowell Mellett, Coordinator of Government films, Hollywood's producers were to make and commercially distribute some twenty-six shorts on subjects selected from a list of topics submitted by the coordinator.

"If a profit is to be made," said one exhibitor, "exhibition wants to know about it. We insist that we are not to be exploited. I do not really suppose that any producer will be making a profit on one of those projected pictures, but we want the entirely patriotic, and non-profit, nature of the activity established and confirmed.

"There are many commercial differences and conflicts among exhibitors, but there are no conflicts in patriotism."

One proposal to go before the meeting contemplated a special underwriting of the pictures by exhibitors and an accounting which would deliver any profits to war activities causes.

Among those expected to attend the meeting Thursday were: Barney Balaban of Paramount, George Schaefer of RKO, Joseph Bernhard of Warners, Harry Brandt of New York, and R. B. Wilby of Atlanta.

Britain Pays

BRITAIN played paymaster to American film companies again, Wednesday, allowing remittance of $5,000,000. It was the second quarterly installment under the monetary agreement which allows American distributors to withdraw $20,000,000 this year from Great Britain, out of their frozen revenues. The agreement expires November 1st.

The quarterly payments are exclusive of permission to withdraw 50 per cent of funds frozen as of October 28th last. That 50 per cent was estimated at $18,000,000.

Prices Going Up

PRICES were still going up this week for film stories. A record $300,000 was paid by 20th Century-Fox on Monday to John Steinbeck for the screen rights to his play and book, "The Moon Is Down." The price was the highest single payment ever recorded for an outright story purchase, and it has been topped by only a few percentage returns to authors.

Twentieth Century-Fox acquired the story after bidding against virtually every major studio in Hollywood. Offers were reported to have topped $200,000 before the play opened in New York several weeks ago, on the strength of sales of the Steinbeck book about Nazi domination of a small Norwegian town.

Nunnally Johnson, who wrote the screenplay for Mr. Steinbeck's "The Grapes of Wrath" will write the scenario for "The Moon Is Down." The deal was concluded for Mr. Steinbeck by Annie Laurie Williams. Oscar Serlin produced the play. Production will get underway as quickly as possible to take advantage of current interest in the story, with release tentatively set for early autumn.

The record price parallels similar high bidding for stage properties last year. Paramount bought "Lady in the Dark" in March 1941 for $285,000, the previous high mark.

ALLIED HITS WAR EFFORT; VOTES ON SALES PLAN

Myers Bulletin Demands Equal Representation for Exhibitor Organizations

Exhibitor trade associations are being neglected in industry war effort plans, Allied States Association charged this week on the eve of a national board of directors meeting scheduled for Thursday, in Chicago, at which the organization was to complete the exhibitor ballotting on the Unity sales plan.

Too many committees, duplication of effort, irresponsible volunteer programs and a failure by many wartime motion picture industry programs to include theatre trade associations, long the leaders of independent exhibitors were sharply criticized in a bulletin from Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied. The Association is one of the two leading spokesmen for independent theatre operators and led the way in the organization of the all-industry unity conferences of the United Motion Picture Industry Committee.

The industry's war efforts could be greatly benefited if they took advantage of the existing organization of exhibitor trade associations, Mr. Myers wrote. He urged, also, a better information service on what the industry is doing, and what theatremen are going to be asked to do to aid the U. S. war effort.

Allied's demand for a better integrated war program was placed high on the agenda for the Chicago meeting.

Members of the national board of directors were to meet principally to pass on the new picture selling plan proposed by the UMPI conferences, however. The action by Allied was considered likely to be decisive of the fate of the blocks-of-12 formula arrived at by the joint exhibitor-distributor meetings as a substitute for the blocks-of-five selling system now in effect under the New York consent decree between the United States Government, Paramount, MGM, Warners, RKO and 20th Century-Fox.

Exhibition in the field already has voted for the UMPI selling system by a margin of over five to one. It has received general support from independent trade associations in all sections of the country, and from member units of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

A number of constituent Allied units have also approved the plan, or indicated that they would authorize their delegates to the Chicago directors meeting to vote in its behalf. Other units sent their representatives to Chicago with full authority to act in accord with the national consensus of Allied. At midweek industry observers were unanimously confident that the UMPI sales plan would receive approval at the Allied meeting.

Injection of the question of authority over the industry's war program was not expected to delay or interfere with action on the new selling system. The appearance of Mr. Myers' bulletin over the weekend, however, and the sharpness of his criticism of neglect of the independent theatre interests was expected to bring sharp debate in its own behalf, however.

"Exhibitors more than ever are looking to their trade associations for information and guidance," Mr. Myers wrote. "Although numerous emergency committees have been created to handle certain phases of the war work, the trade associations are still the main reliance of the exhibitors."

Much confusion exists in exhibitor ranks over the war program because of the overlapping authority and duplication of effort of some of the emergency groups, he asserted.

The solution, he indicated, is the inclusion of more exhibitors, representing the principal field trade associations, on all committees and the use of the associations and the "unity" organization of the United Motion Picture Industry as a means of direct liaison with theatre operators. It was to solve such problems for both exhibition and distribution that the UMPI movement was conceived, he added.

Committees specifically mentioned by Mr. Myers included the War Activities Committee, priority committee appointed to represent exhibition and distribution before the War Production Board in Washington, "March of Dimes" and Army-Navy Relief Fund boards. The bulletin asserted that the WAC was in particular need of "an adequate information service" to answer queries from independent theatre men and from associations.

It demanded a clarification of the status of exhibitors serving on the committees and a clear understanding as to whether present exhibitor members are serving as individuals or organization representatives. They were not originally appointed as official delegates, the Allied message noted.

"Failure to utilize the goodwill, influence and facilities of the trade associations is a regrettable loss," Mr. Myers wrote. Nothing should interfere with the fullest cooperation with the war effort, he asserted.

Goodwill Neglected

"All special committees and volunteers should realize that much of the enthusiasm and driving power of relief campaigns and similar projects are derived from the endorsement and support thereof by the exhibitor associations. As matters stand, the influence, good will and facilities of the exhibitor associations are being neglected in favor of centering all authority and credit in a comparatively few individuals in New York and Hollywood, functioning by remote control," he said.

He also criticized committees composed exclusively of New York and Hollywood executives, pointing out that in most campaigns the burden of work is carried by their subordinates, and the individual theatre operator.

"Since there is to be an honorary class," he asked, "would it not have been chivalrous to include a few independent exhibitors? They, too, would like to say to Uncle Sam, 'See what I am doing for you?' Uncle Sam might even appoint some leading independent a Lieutenant Colonel or a Lieutenant Commander in recognition of the independent exhibitors' contribution to the cause."

Discussing the question of who is to handle priority problems, Mr. Myers pointed out that the UMPI movement, meeting in Chicago last December, made specific provision for a committee to handle this matter. He urged that the committee be expanded and given full authority to represent all branches of the industry. He indicated that all priority problems, particularly those involving raw stocks and a possible decrease in the number of annual features concerned the entire industry, rather than distribution or exhibition as separate groups.

The UMPI priority committee met Monday, in the office of Joseph Bernhard, Warner circuit head and chairman, to hear a report on the Washington meetings with the WPB last week. The meeting was described as a joint conference with the War Activities group inasmuch as a number of those present were members of both groups, and several representatives of the WAC sat in on the meeting. The UMPI priority committee consists of Mr. Bernhard, Sidney Samuelson, Carter Barron and W. F. Crockett.

Price controls are another item of vital concern to the industry, and will be studied at Chicago, Mr. Myers wrote. He warned that there was a tendency for film rentals to climb out of proportion to other business and warned that this was dangerous in the face of government efforts to halt inflationary trends.

"Unless the industry applies the brake voluntarily," the bulletin said, "film rentals and company earnings may become so disproportionate in comparison with other industries as to invite political attack. Again, if film rentals continue on the up-grade it is inevitable that exhibitors will launch a movement to bring them under the Price Control Act."

Studied Canadian Ceiling

Mr. Myers visited Toronto on Monday and Tuesday, en route to Chicago, to study the effects of price controls and admissions ceilings on the Canadian film industry.

Noting action by a Minnesota district court declaring unconstitutional the Northwest Allied state law against the decree selling method, Mr. Myers observed that it would probably deter exhibitor groups in other states from seeking similar legislative control of trade practices.

In addition to deciding on the UMPI sales plan and conciliation proposals the Allied directors, on Thursday, were to examine the Society of Independent Producers attack on the plan, discuss high rentals and overlapping war committees, the insurance of recognition of contributions by independent exhibitors; a revised ASCAP license schedule; desirability of continuing the Allied information service; New Jersey Allied convention proposals and general organization business.

Letter to the Editor

Wilby-Kincey Service Corp.
Atlanta, Georgia
April 28, 1942

On page 14 of the Herald of April 25th somebody writes as follows: "The Wilby & Kincey circuit of Atlanta, Georgia, a Paramount partner, also officially approved the new selling system when Robert Wilby, president, spoke on its behalf."

We have done nothing of the kind and Robert Wilby has never spoken in behalf of that selling plan. As a matter of fact, he considers it to be worse than the present plan and has so stated.

UMPI Prepares to Act on Plan As Exhibitors Vote in Favor

Approvals of the Unity selling plan continued to flow in from the field this week as the Allied States members prepared to take concerted action at Chicago. UMPI leaders, in anticipation of a clear majority in favor of the blocks-of-twelve formula were also preparing to summon a meeting of the UMPI Committee of the Whole.

William F. Rodgers, at midweek, had not issued a definite meeting call. It was expected to follow shortly after the Allied meeting, probably next week. New York will be the scene of the meeting.

Sources close to the Unity leadership expressed hope, meanwhile, that the plan would soon be ready for presentation to the Department of Justice. The Committee of the Whole will hear reports from the field units on the acceptance or rejection of the sales plan. It will also place in final form previously approved recommendations for the improvement of trade practices. This program included, in addition to the sales plan, 2) a conciliation system for territorial disputes, 3) a method of settling individual disputes, 4) a means to prevent forcing of short subjects, and 5) recommendations for the improvement of the consent decree arbitration system.

Leaders hope that the committee can complete this program, and cast it in fitting language, by May 15th. Then a committee will present the whole to the government. If it is possible to complete this work on schedule some UMPI measures see government approval, and submission to the federal District Court in New York in time to meet the June 1st deadline of the escape clause. In any case, both exhibitors and distributors expressed confidence that the sales measure could be presented in time to permit planning to start for the new season, beginning September 1st.

Tuesday the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association meeting, in convention at Kansas City, voted approval of the UMPI selling plan. The membership session voted solidly for the proposal, with R. R. Biechele presiding, after Ed Kuykendall, national MPTOA president, explained its provisions and how they were reached at the unity conferences and urged a favorable vote.

Other speakers at the two-day meeting in the Phillips Hotel included E. C. Rhoden, regional War Activities chairman; H. J. Griffith, Variety club leader, who discussed the promotion of war bond sales; Byron Spencer, copyright attorney; Claude Lee, Paramount director of exhibitor relations, and David Palfreyman, MPPDA representative.

Connecticut Votes Yes

The United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut meeting last week cast their ballot in support of the UMPI sales proposal. On Thursday Ed Kuykendall, national MPTOA president, reported that he had been notified by Herman Levy, executive secretary, of the unanimous approval of the Connecticut group.

Connecticut Allied, meeting at New Haven on Monday, instructed its executive secretary Maxwell Alderman to represent it at the national Allied board meeting in Chicago with secret instructions as to the unit's vote on UMPI. Dr. J. B. Fishman, who was reelected president at the meeting, would not discuss the unit's stand on the selling proposals.

Also re-elected by Connecticut Allied were Mr. Alderman, Charles Repass, vice-president; Joseph Shulman, treasurer, and 11 directors, headed by Daniel Pouzzner, chairman; A. Schuman, Leo Bonoff, Maurice Bailey, Morris Jacobson, Jack Schwartz, Harry Lavietes, Barney Calechman, Marton Kelleher, George Lewitt and Joseph Corwel.

Texas Theatre Owners, Inc., at a regional meeting last week in San Antonio, approved the new selling plan unanimously, describing it as better than the blocks of five system and a decided step towards real unity. Henry Reeves, president, conducted the poll.

Speakers at the meeting included R. J. O'Donnell, of Interstate Circuit; D. B. Strickland, legislative representative; Mrs. Volney Taylor, assistant regional director of national defense, and H. A. Daniels.

EXHIBITORS IN EAST HIT BY 'DIM-OUT'; GAS RATIONING

Army Orders Permanent Dimming; Salesmen Get Extra Gasoline

Hundreds of theatres in New York, New Jersey and Delaware will be affected by the new Army orders issued on Monday that all skyscraper lights above the 15th floor be blacked out, all advertising signs be shaded or extinguished and all street and automobile lights be dimmed or shaded. A coastal strip 15 miles deep in the three states on the Eastern seaboard is designated in the official ruling, for the duration of the war, in order that American ships off the Atlantic coast, silhouetted against the sky glow, will not be easy prey for enemy torpedoes.

The west coast, particularly near San Francisco, has been operating under "dim out" conditions for some months.

On Thursday night, the largest amusement section in the world, New York's Broadway, Times Square and Rockefeller Center areas, had its first total blackout, which extended from 23d to 123d Street, east and west. More than 100 motion picture theatres, many first runs, were involved in the test.

Other war developments as they affected the exhibition field were reported during the week including the news that film salesmen and others who need automobiles for business purposes will receive a larger gasoline allotment than pleasure drivers. This was indicated by Oil Coordinator Harold L. Ickes last Friday in Washington.

That Hollywood has given the U. S. Government priority on talent for war work and that the entire industry is lining up for the forthcoming Army and Navy Relief drive, were other news developments reported this week which received industry-wide attention.

Early in the week, exhibitors in New York forecast that theatre business during the 20-minute total blackout Thursday night of upper Manhattan, from 9:00 to 9:30 P. M., would be subnormal. Opinion was expressed, however, that because large crowds were expected to throng Broadway to see the effects of total darkness on the famed Great White Way, business on the whole would not be greatly affected during the evening.

The test is one of a series held in Manhattan, with exception of northern part of the borough which will be darkened on May 7th. It took in the city's big first run houses, including Radio City Music Hall, Paramount, Roxy, Strand, Capitol and Rivoli, all legitimate theatres and other important amusement places. Theatres were prepared for the blackout. All exterior lighting was extinguished in addition to inside illumination visible from the street. Boxoffices remained in operation with subdued lighting and patrons were permitted to enter or leave theatres. A minimum of lighting was maintained in theatre lobbies. All of Broadway's huge electric signs, which customarily draw the attention of out-of-town visitors, were dark.

DOUGLAS BACK IN OCD WORK

Melvyn Douglas has returned to the Office of Civilian Defense at Washington. He had been working in Hollywood. It was said he would work in OCD without pay. Mr. Douglas said last week he favored changing the name of his OCD section, now known as the Arts Council, to the section of writers, radio actors, and artists.

One of the most extensive blackouts in the East will take place next Tuesday, affecting hundreds of theatres, when all New Jersey areas not previously tested will be covered, comprising the counties of Sussex, Warren, Hunterdon, Mercer, Cumberland and Cape May and portions of eight other counties. The Jersey test will last 15 minutes, starting at 10:10 P. M., covering an area of 4,460 square miles. On Tuesday night this week Southern Queens was darkened. The remainder of that borough will be tested May 5th.

First official blackout in southern Ohio will be conducted at Springfield on May 17th, with an advance rehearsal scheduled for May 10th. Exhibitors of Ocean City, N. J., reported that a uniform system of blue lighting for all theatre marquees, display windows and other illumination visible at sea has been adopted for the boardwalk to comply with dimout requirements.

Film Row Staggers Hours

In Cleveland, the city's Defense Council has asked local film exchanges and allied film industries to inaugurate a system of staggering working hours to ease the transportation situation due to greater use of street cars and busses. Four alternatives were presented and the hours agreed upon will be adopted by all. The suggested schedules are: 7:00 A.M. to 3:45 P.M., 7:15 to 4:00, 7:30 to 4:15; or 9:15 to 6:00, 9:30 to 6:15, 9:45 to 6:30; or 7:00 to 3:15, 7:15 to 3:30, 7:30 to 3:45; or 9:45 to 6:00, 10:00 to 6:15, 10:15 to 6:30. Cleveland is the first city in which the film industry has been asked to adopt staggered working hours as a war measure.

William E. Spragg, coordinator of the amusement subdivision of the Rhode Island State Council of Defense, and district manager for Mullin and Pinanski, notified the council this week that more than 40 per cent of the 62 motion picture theatres in the state were prepared for air raids. Theatres which have carried out the council's regulations will display authorized stickers indicating they have been equipped for raids. Mr. Spragg is touring the state, inspecting all houses and making necessary suggestions and recommendations to operators and managers.

Philadelphia and nearby film houses are continuing to cooperate extensively in the war effort. In connection with the drive to collect reading material for servicemen, Waxmann's Hollywood, Astor and Cinema in Atlantic City, N. J., have placed boxes in the lobbies for deposit of books and other reading matter. Wilmer & Vincent's Ritz, in Reading, Pa., ran special matinees last week from 3 to 5 P.M., admitting anyone bringing two books or phonograph records in good condition.

Rochester exhibitors reported a decrease of 40 per cent in theatre business last week due to a surprise blackout lasting one hour on Thursday night. Business was off most of the week, with many people remaining in their homes in anticipation of the test, it was said.

Gas Rationing Starts May 15th

That film salesmen and others who require automobiles for business purposes will receive a larger gasoline allotment than pleasure drivers was indicated last Friday by Harold L. Ickes, Oil Coordinator, in Washington. Regardless of any gasoline rationing system put into effect in the 17 states along the Atlantic seaboard, this recommendation would prevail, it was intimated. Other persons who need cars to get to work also will rate higher allotments, it was said.

The effect on theatre patronage was also seen lessened when Mr. Ickes declared there was no justification for statements that pleasure car owners would get only 2½ to five gallons weekly. He indicated that the figure would be nearer 10 gallons. The gasoline order is effective May 15th. But the question of whether rationing would be put on a national basis or confined to the East was undecided.

A survey of first-run theatres in Toronto, meanwhile, disclosed that gasoline rationing in Canada which became effective April 1st, has had no adverse effect on theatre grosses. Theatre parking lots are accommodating just as many cars, it was said, as in pre-rationing days, estimated at 1,000 autos a day. General opinion, however, on the effect of car and tire rationing on film business was that neighborhood house boxoffice grosses would increase.

Exhibitor Plans for Army, Navy Relief

Highlight event to launch the industry's theatre drive May 14th on behalf of the Army and Navy Emergency Relief will be a Broadway parade and other demonstrations. The parade will be held at noon on the opening day of the campaign with large divisions of the armed forces participating. Members of the American Women's Voluntary Services will take collections in front of Broadway theatres, a reviewing stand will be erected in Times Square and legitimate stage and screen stars will ride in the parade in Army jeeps. Banners in front of theatres will announce the campaign.

These and other plans were formulated at a meeting last Friday by the industry's Army and Navy Emergency Relief Committee, which was attended by Max A. Cohen, head of the Cinema Circuit and chairman of New York State; Lt. Com. Leslie Jacobs, for the Navy; Major A. G. Rudd, of the Army; Robert M. Weitman, chairman of the Times Square Committee; Edward C. Dowden, in charge of parade arrangements; J. J. Martin, Navy Relief Society, and Oscar A. Doob, publicity chairman. The group met again on Wednesday.

The national committee, of which Nicholas M. Schenck is chairman, reported meanwhile that 5,190 theatres already have pledged to cooperate in the drive. Gary Cooper will make the special appeal trailer for the campaign to be used in theatres throughout the country, it was learned. Col. Darryl F. Zanuck is filming the picture at the 20th Century-Fox Studio.

State chairmen who are participating in the campaign include: R. B. Wilby, Ala. and Ga.; Harry Nace, Ariz.; Charles Skouras, Robert H. Poole, Cal.; I. J. Hoffman, Conn.; Carter Barron, Del. and D. C.; J. L. Cartwright, Fla.; Oscar Lam, Ga.; I. H. Harris, Idaho; Harry Katz and Kenneth Collins, Ind.; A. H. Blank, Ia. and Neb.; Fred Dolle, Ky.; M. Mullin, New England; E. V. Richards, La.; Sidney Lust, Md.; J. O. Brooks and Paul Schlosman, Mich.; John Friedl, Minn.; Harry Arthur, Mo.; Joseph English, A. M. Russell, Stewart North, Mont.; Walter Reade, Don Jacocks, N. J.; H. F. Kincey, N. C.; Mike Cooper, N. D.; P. J. Wood, O.; Ted Schlanger, Pa.; E. M. Fay, R. I.; Charles Klein, S. D.; M. F. Schnibben, S. C.; Tony Sudekum, Tenn.; W. F. Crockett, Va.; Harold Fitzgerald, Wis., and E. J. Schulte, Wyo.

Talent Priority for U. S.

The Hollywood Victory Committee at a special meeting on the West Coast last week ruled that Government priority on motion picture talent would prevail for the duration of the war. Official sanction of specific war activities within the film industry and allied agencies was announced by the committee. Priority on talent rating by Washington will give the group an official guide in allotting stars by classifying the importance of all Governmental and patriotic requests, it was said.

On this new basis, the committee is sending 30 stars to sell war bonds and stamps in 120 cities as the industry's response to the Treasury Department's request for cooperation in an intensive national drive which will begin June 1st. In addition, a special Hollywood Victory sub-committee has been formed to coordinate radio and film industry war activities. Members are: Sidney Strotz, Don Gilman, Donald Thornburgh, William Forbes, Lewis Allen Weiss, Bert Allenberg, Bette Davis, Rosalind Russell, Charles Feldman and Fred W. Beetson.

A speakers' bureau was organized for the purpose of having industry leaders available for patriotic calls. Edward Arnold is chairman and Mervyn LeRoy and Donald Thornburgh are among its members.

The committee announced that cooperation with the USO war fund drive will be highlighted by a nationwide all-star radio broadcast and by a short film starring players who have entertained soldiers at Army camps. This USO trailer is being made with the cooperation of War Activities Committee.

In order to lessen the drain on Hollywood's foremost stars and personalities, Melvyn Douglas, director of Arts Council of the Office of Civilian Defense, is reported to be considering the launching of local talent pools throughout the country from which entertainers for war purposes could be obtained.

"SLUMP" IN SOME LOCALITIES SEEN

Connecticut theatres are complaining of "spotty" business, New Haven sources report. Causes are said to be expanding war production, new training courses, volunteer defense courses, increased employment of women. However, some "downtown" New Haven and Bridgeport theatres are prospering, as are the taverns.

Pittsburgh theatres are undergoing a slight slump, compared with good receipts the past three months. Business is best in war production areas such as Homestead, Aliquippa, Braddock.

Jack Cohn Named to USO Drive

Appointment of Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, as coordinator of the Entertainment and Sports Division of the New York USO War Fund Campaign, was announced over the weekend by Henry C. Brunie, campaign chairman of the New York committee. Mr. Cohn will coordinate the following groups: film industry players, home office and branch managers, theatre accessory and supply houses; the stage, radio, sports and music industry.

Chairmen for each group to act under his leadership are now being selected. Plans are already under way for a campaign to bring in $500,000 for USO via special events and entertainment. Unlike last year, however, there will be no theatre collections. USO's war fund is $32,000,000 and the drive opens May 11th.

In Hollywood last Wednesday, Louis B. Mayer of MGM, a national vice-chairman of USO, declared at a luncheon given to Walter Hoving, chairman of the national board of directors of the organization, that his experience in similar work during the first World War led him to believe the present system of furnishing off-duty entertainment for the armed forces was much more efficient than that of 1917. At that time, Mr. Mayer pointed out, there were six different agencies attempting to carry out the program which USO is doing.

At the same luncheon, Edward Arnold, chairman of the industry's permanent charities committee, named William Koenig, general production manager at the 20th Century-Fox studio, industry chairman of USO.

Radio star Kate Smith signed with Columbia Pictures on Tuesday in New York to appear in a series of shorts titled "America Sings With Kate Smith" which the company will produce. Miss Smith is contributing her services for the shorts on behalf of the USO. All profits accrued from the films will be turned over to the national organization.

Miss Smith's arrangement is one of several pictures planned by Harry Cohn, president of Columbia, on behalf of various service relief organizations, it was announced. Under the terms of the contract, the films will be produced in New York, supervised by Ted Collins, Miss Smith's manager, and will feature three songs on patriotic themes presented by the singer. This will be the first time Miss Smith has appeared in motion pictures in ten years. The shorts will go into immediate production, will be made at the rate of one per month and in addition to distribution in theatres throughout the country, will be reduced to 16 mm. for distribution to Army camps and Naval bases for the entertainment of men in the armed forces.

The count to date is 90 persons, including 23 top stars, who are set to tour with the Hollywood Victory Caravan, first appearance of which was scheduled for Washington Thursday night. Kenneth Thomson, chairman of the Hollywood Victory Committee, and Charles Feldman will act as co-managers of the Caravan, which will tour 13 cities.

All war entertainments involving the use of professional talent will be routed through a new parent committee, known temporarily as the Actors War Activities Committee, which was organized last week at a meeting held in New York. Approximately 60 representatives of all branches of the theatre, radio and concert field were present to consider the plan to help the entertainment industry function as a unit in support of the war. Bert Lytell, president of Actors Equity and chairman of the new committee; James Sauter, executive vice-chairman; Lawrence Tibbett, president of the American Guild of Musical Artists, and Blanche Witherspoon, executive secretary of the guild, explained details of the new organization.

Requests for entertainers and singers by departments and agencies of the Government, war relief and benefit organizations are to be investigated and filed by the new committee.

New York film theatre exhibitors, Broadway producers, sports promoters and baseball executives who have distributed 1,000,000 free tickets to servicemen visiting the city were officially thanked at a ceremony at the Defense Recreation Committee on Monday afternoon, at that organization's headquarters. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mayor LaGuardia were expected to participate in the event.

War Bond and Stamp Sales

It was reported from Hollywood last week that a studio comptrollers' sub-committee had been formed to organize a systematic handling of accounts in a unification of the mechanics of a war savings plan for employes of all studios and allied industries.

More than 250 Indiana theatres are running a trailer for "MacArthur Week," this week, for the sale of war savings bonds and stamps in the state. Don R. Rossiter, executive secretary of Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, worked out the theatre participation with Treasury Department officials. The Department also has given authority to the Indiana-Illinois Theatre circuit to display the "Minute Man" flag, signifying its 100 per cent cooperation in the purchases of war bonds on the payroll-allotment plan.

War Subjects Now Being Distributed

There are eleven war and defense subjects approved by the industry's War Activities Committee currently being distributed. Since the last published list (Motion Picture Herald, issue of March 7th, page 39), "Red Cross Trailer" and "The New Spirit" have been withdrawn because of completed distribution. The additional subjects are "Ring of Steel", "Fighting the Fire Bomb", "Any Bonds Today", "Lake Carrier" and "United China Relief".

From Hollywood it is reported that producers will make 40 instead of the originally proposed 26 entertainment films on the war for the Government during the first six months.

A Warner Brothers production unit, headed by Jean Negulesco, has arrived in New York to set plans for the filming of two short subjects featuring the bands and glee clubs of the United States military and naval academies.

The Treasury Department last week made available 10,000 advance prints of excerpts from Secretary Morgenthau's speech urging purchase of War Stamps and Bonds.

The eleven subjects now being distributed and the exchanges handling them are as follows:

her recent cross-country trip for the U. S. Treasury, left Hollywood last Friday on another grand tour to promote the sale of bonds.

Excerpts from a speech by Secretary of the Treasury Henry W. Morgenthau, Jr., urging the public to buy war bonds were flashed on the screens of theatres last Friday almost simultaneously throughout the country, the War Activities Committee announced in New York last week. Key camera men shot the material in Washington last Monday and the Treasury made 10,000 advance prints available.

Radio Station, Set Construction Ends

The Federal Communications Commission this week barred further radio station construction for the duration, except experimental FM and educational stations.

Meeting Monday in Washington to consider the recommendation of the Defense Communications Board that no further authorizations involving the use of materials be permitted, the commission agreed to ban new stations or changes in facilities for standard broadcasting, television, facsimile, relay, or FM, but deferred action on experimental high frequency and non-commercial educational stations.

The commission ruled that no applications to meet the requirements of outstanding conditional grants or requests for extension of time to complete construction would be granted unless the applicant could show that he had made substantial expenditures, or actually commenced construction prior to the order, and had available substantially all materials and equipment necessary.

It was explained, however, that the new policy is not intended to preclude authorizations involving essential repairs or replacements to maintain existing stations, as in the case of a station damaged or destroyed by fire.

In pending applications for construction of stations or changes in facilities involving materials, the applicant is required to file a statement by June 1st, showing the circumstances he believes would warrant the granting of his application in the public interest.

Meanwhile, radio set construction for civilian use virtually ended last week. Thirty of 55 companies complied with WPB orders; the remainder wind up production within a few weeks.

The plants which stopped civilian production last week had made approximately 57 per cent of all such sets sold in 1941, $151,000,000 worth.

The list of the companies that ceased civilian production follows: Belmont, Colonial, Crosley, Delco, Eckstein, Electrical Research, Espey, Farnsworth, Garod, General Electric, Gilfillan, Hallicrafters, Hammarlund, Kingston, Meissner, Midwest, Mission Bell, Noblitt-Sparks, Packard Bell, Philharmonic, Remler, Setchell-Carlson, Scott, Sparks-Withington, Stewart-Warner, Stromberg-Carlson, Templetone, Watterson, Wilcox Gay, Zenith.

War work to which the industry is being converted includes all sorts of detection equipment, used to detect airplanes and ships, and a variety of receiving and transmitting sets for use in airplanes, tanks, trucks, and other military equipment, and even small sets for individual soldiers.

Iowa-Nebraska Record on Victory Films

All but 30 of the 375 theatres in Nebraska and 8 of the 470 houses in Iowa have pledged to show Victory Films and cooperate with the War Activities Committee, it was announced in Des Moines this week. A. H. Blank, head of the Tri-States and Central States circuit at Des Moines, Ia., and a member of the executive committee of the theatre division of WAC, reported these figures. Mr. Blank emphasized to his organization that presentation of Victory Films was one of the most important jobs of every Tri-State manager.

Dunphy WPB Liaison; Priority Talks Continue

Christopher J. Dunphy, former Paramount executive, took up his new duties in Washington on Monday as chief of the Amusement Section of the Services Branch of the War Production Board, to which post he was appointed last week. Mr. Dunphy will work under N. G. Burleigh, chief of the WPB Services Branch. Committees of production and exhibition leaders, meanwhile, continued discussions with the WPB on priorities for the film industry and on voluntary conservation of materials.

To Help Business Men

The new section, Mr. Dunphy explained as he took over his Government job, will serve as a clearing house for business men in the amusement industries who are seeking advice and information on priority problems. Organization of the section was expected to be completed this week. It is said that business men have been unable thus far to cope with priority problems and for some months have complained that there is no central bureau which could help resolve their difficulties. The new section was designed to meet that need and will invite amusement industries to bring their problems to it and also will function to clear the way for any formal action which may be necessary, it was said.

WPB officials, meanwhile, indicated that the section would not take over any of the work with motion picture priorities and conservation which is being handled through the Consumers' Durable Goods Branch of the board.

Mr. Dunphy said in New York last week that his appointment was a Civil Service one and that he would have the assistance of technical experts experienced in the amusement field.

He was with Paramount Pictures from 1934 to 1938, serving as advertising and publicity director of that company's West Coast studio and as assistant to Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board. Later, he served with the home office advertising and publicity department. A native New Yorker, born in 1889, Mr. Dunphy was in Wall Street and later was assistant to the late Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post. He served in World War 1 and was attached to the staff of Major General James G. Harbord at General Headquarters. When Secretary of War Newton D. Baker visited France during the last war, Mr. Dunphy was assigned to his staff.

Priorities Meetings Continue

Last week, when producers and exhibitors met with War Production Board officials in Washington, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on April 25th, Louis Upton, chief of the Consumers' Durable Goods Branch of the board, urged both groups to conserve materials and manpower as much as possible. The conferences developed that while there was a definite and serious shortage of many commodities, the film industry might be most vitally affected by the raw stock situation.

BLACKOUT HITS TESTIMONIAL

Speaker and guests were temporarily embarrassed Monday night in Albany when a blackout test interrupted the proceedings of a testimonial dinner given by the local Variety Club in honor of Moe Grassgreen, branch manager of 20th Century-Fox, who completed 25 years of service with that company.

Toastmaster Dave Miller of Universal's Cleveland office, was introducing Pete Dana, Universal manager at Pittsburgh, when suddenly the lights were dimmed in Dinty's, scene of the ceremonies, and the sirens sounded. Mr. Miller entertained the 200 guests with stories and anecdotes during the 30-minute test. Speakers at the dinner included Louis Schine, C. J. Latta, Tom Bailey, Sam Rosen, Sidney Samson, Phil Fox, Clayton Eastman, Harry Thomas and Mr. Dana.

Mr. Upton told representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Advisory Committee and the Motion Picture and Speaking Stage Theatres' Advisory Committee, enumerated in last week's MOTION PICTURE HERALD, that one of the most important materials to be conserved was film. He pointed out there was a tremendous need for film in military as well as civilian use and urged producers, it was learned, to take fewer "repeats" of scenes as one means of cutting down consumption. Members of the WPB rubber, copper, iron and steel branches also spoke at the meetings and explained the situation prevailing in those industries, product of which is consumed in considerable quantities by the production and exhibition branches of the film industry.

The meetings brought out, it was said, that the industry itself had been working for some time on conservation methods, that several programs have been laid out and that much other material has been salvaged for re-use or as a contribution to military production.

Premiere Showing of "Native Land" Set

The premiere of "Native Land," said to be America's first full-length labor film, will be held at the World Theatre in New York May 9th according to Frontier Films, Inc., producers of the picture. Narrated by Paul Robeson, "Native Land" has been dramatized by a number of players from the Group Theatre under the direction of Leo Hurwitz and Paul Strand. The film has been three years in production.

Haber Has Son

Ben Haber of the 20th Century-Fox advertising department is the father of an eight-pound baby boy, born Monday at the Jewish Hospital in Brooklyn.

Circuit Adds Seventh

The Bartelstein Bros. circuit in the Chicago area has added the Ridge Theatre to its chain, which now consists of seven houses.

Allvine Sees Committee as 'Clearing House'

An industry clearing house in which the best brains in motion picture advertising and promotion can be directed towards the solution of any and all problems in public relations is the aim of the newly formed eastern branch of the Publicity Directors Committee.

Glendon Allvine, recently named executive secretary, explained some of the objectives of the new coordinating group at its offices at 28 West 44th Street, New York City, this week. He has had experience in motion picture public relations and advertising and is a former Kansas City and New York newspaper man.

Many problems in public relations affect the entire industry. The eastern publicity directors' committee, and its western counterpart, he explained, is a sincere attempt to work out coordinated policy, and concerted and specific action to remedy them.

"We will fight no one company's battles," Mr. Allvine said. "Rather, when anything develops that affects the repute or good standing of motion pictures we will get together, talk the question over and work out an agreement to guide everyone."

Events' Calendar Setup

As a start on its program Mr. Allvine will maintain a calendar for trade shows, special press conferences, social affairs, special previews and screenings and other activities. Dates will be assigned in strict accordance with the priority of requests, he said. The calendar, it is hoped, will lessen confusion in press coverage and afford all companies an equal opportunity of gaining the attention of exhibitors and others at trade shows or other meetings.

Also the committee last week revived the issue of quoting critics' star ratings in displays or newspaper copy. A letter to the Brandt Circuit, which had advertised Charlie Chaplin's "Gold Rush" at the Globe with critics' ratings, pointed out that the practice had been dropped by agreement and asked the theatre's cooperation. It explained that the industry consensus held that the policy was hurtful to the industry in the long run.

"We will try to share the publicity headaches affecting all the industry," Mr. Allvine remarked, "and more importantly, avoid them by planning ahead and indicating what can and should be done to avoid public relations pitfalls."

Discussion Begins

The committee has already begun discussions, and exchanging ideas with the West Coast unit, on broader public relations issues, Mr. Allvine revealed. Institutional radio advertising, cooperative advertising, sensational photographic and press publicity, and other matters are already under consideration, it was learned, although Mr. Allvine declined to discuss them.

Mr. Allvine and A. M. Botsford, publicity head of 20th Century-Fox, described the new film public relations project over radio station WINS on Wednesday noon. They were interviewed by Martin Weldon, radio "columnist."

VAUDEVILLE SHOW SUCCESS FORECASTS ROAD COME BACK

Three Shows Now Playing in New York Plan Summer Road Tours

Vaudeville is coming back.

The war, bringing increased populations with greater spending money to industrial centers in the East and Middlewest, is creating the renaissance of the "good old days," observers indicate. Tire and gasoline conservation resulting in the need for people in small town areas to stay close to home for the duration is another factor, it is reported. But the general opinion of New York bookers of stage talent for motion picture theatres, including executives of Loew's, RKO, Paramount, Warner Bros. and other circuits, is that vaudeville "hasn't staged a comeback yet," and that the summer months probably will be the determining factor of its revival.

Currently, however, indications of a resurgence of vaudeville are reported from various sources. A number of film theatres of the larger circuits which book shows on a picture-stage presentation policy, contrary to precedent, are planning to continue live talent bills through the summer. Three large vaudeville shows are holding forth in New York, two under the ægis of Clifford C. Fischer and Lee Shubert, theatrical impresarios who, it is understood, plan to roadshow their attractions following the New York runs and thus give further impetus to the renaissance of vaudeville.

Talent Available

A good omen for the return of the stage tradition set by Weber and Fields, Bert Williams, Harrington and Hart, Nora Bayes, and their colleagues, according to theatrical agency officials in New York, is the availability of talent. Observers point out that oldtimers and newcomers who have been and will continue to be booked by USO-Camp Shows, Inc., for shows to Army camps and Naval bases, are available; that when they complete their USO tours, they can be booked for shows into straight vaudeville houses and film theatres where stage presentations share the bill.

Spokesmen for most of the large talent agencies in New York, including William Morris Agency, General Amusement Corp., Music Corporation of America, Fanchon and Marco, among others, are of the opinion that vaudeville has a good chance for a comeback, spurred on by war conditions, if production costs involved in presenting live talent entertainment can be "controlled."

An official for one agency indicated that possible reduction by the War Production Board, of the annual output of motion pictures for the duration, pointed to single feature bills and foreshadowed large scale booking of stage talent into film theatres as a result. He warned, however, that vaudeville under these conditions couldn't endure, unless the "best possible talent available was utilized."

VAUDEVILLE ACT TOURS FOR FILM

A film exploitation idea utilizing a vaudeville "turn" and extending to night clubs, was launched by the Roxy Theatre in New York this week which has been furnishing "My Gal Sal" quartets to the leading night spots, restaurants and radio stations to plug songs from the 20th Century-Fox Technicolor film starring Rita Hayworth and Victor Mature. Three quartets toured the city last week and will continue this week. Their itinerary included at least one stop nightly at such famed night resorts as the Stork Club, Copacabana, Leon and Eddie's, the Hotels Biltmore, Roosevelt, Commodore, Waldorf-Astoria, New Yorker and McAlpin. Other spots scheduled on the "My Gal Sal" quartets' safari were Rogers' Corner, Childs' Spanish Gardens, Childs' Paramount Grill, the Famous Door, Hickory House, Club Frisco, Toffenetti's, Gay Blades Skating Rink, the Glass Hat, Club 18 and Roseland.

Some of vaudeville's first sons and daughters, whose names were blazoned on the marquee of the old Palace, currently are appearing on Broadway. Willie Howard, Lou Holtz, Phil Baker and Paul Draper are in "Priorities of 1942," at the 46th Street Theatre. This show, with "Keep 'Em Laughing," at the 44th Street Theatre, featuring Victor Moore, William Gaxton, The Hartmans, Hildegarde and Argentina, is produced by Clifford C. Fischer with Lee Shubert as partner. "Harlem Cavalcade," a Negro vaudeville presentation, opened Tuesday night at the Ritz Theatre.

Two Successes

The former two attractions are reportedly doing "tremendous business." If they attain successful runs in New York, and are followed by out-of-town bookings, theatre officials predict they will help to spur efforts of other producers and in general will hasten vaudeville's return.

Meanwhile, reports from motion picture operators and others in the exhibition field, indicate that, particularly in key city industrial centers, vaudeville has returned. The Key Theatre of the Hersker circuit, in Hazleton, Pa., recently inaugurated a new policy of vaudeville three days a week, Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Five acts are being presented with the film. In Milwaukee, the Riverside, combination stage and downtown film house, has increased its admission top from 55 to 60 cents.

The Roxy, New Britain, Conn., is booking name bands on weekends. A similar policy is contemplated for the Holyoke Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. RKO houses in Springfield and Salem, Mass., have adopted stage shows. The Strand, Haverhill, Mass., Poli's, Waterbury and Lyric, Bridgeport, Loew houses, play shows from two to three days each. Warner Bros. has added Keeney's Theatre in Elmira, N. Y., and the Stanley, Utica, to its stage-show-policy theatres, in addition to some neighborhood houses in and around Pittsburgh, another large war production center. Brooklyn neighborhood houses, the Albermarle, began a two-day weekend stage show policy recently, joining the Mayfair and Marine which have been booking live talent for some time.

Stage Shows Increase

A new theatre, the Central, in Passaic, large industrial city, recently inaugurated a stage-show-film policy. The Lafayette and Shea's two film theatres in Buffalo which have been presenting talent acts with pictures intermittently are now booking shows more frequently. Reports from Akron and Youngstown, Ohio, recently indicated that motion picture theatres there are contemplating keeping their vaudeville bookings running through the summer, an about-face of previous policy, it was said. Both cities have thousands of war production workers. RKO's Shubert, in Cincinnati, recently resumed stage shows with films, it was reported.

Robert T. Murphy, managing director of the Twentieth Century Theatre in Buffalo, announced last week that he had signed players for personal appearances, among them Abbott and Costello, Chico Marx, Benny Goodman, John Boles, Jimmy Dorsey, Ina Ray Hutton, Jimmy Durante and Gertrude Neisen. Mr. Murphy believes vaudeville an essential part of the present wartime entertainment program.

In Indianapolis, another key industrial city, the 1,400-seat B. F. Keith's, dark since a stock company occupied it last summer, was reopened last week on a four-day-a-week film and vaudeville policy. Three Chicago theatremen will book, produce and play their own shows and present first-run films. They are Anton F. Scibilia, who is resident manager; Nicholas Boila, a producer, and Sam Roberts, a booker.

RKO May Drop Shows

In New York, it was indicated that a major snag to the vaudeville renaissance might develop in metropolitan RKO houses. Live talent shows in all the circuit's New York theatres may be dropped shortly, it was reported, as a result of demands for increased wages by the American Federation of Musicians. Show-minded executives of RKO, observers point out, those who were responsible for giving live talent "a break" in New York, San Francisco, Cleveland and Boston at the circuit's houses, may still come to agreement with AFM musicians, if it is decided to continued stage presentations with films through the summer.

Whitney Unit Reports 48 Subjects Shipped

Inter-American Office Expects to Have Shipped 82 Subjects by July 1st

The Government film program for the exchange of non-theatrical motion pictures with the Latin American republics to date includes the shipment of 48 titles by the motion picture division of the Office of Inter-American Affairs.

Additionally 21 other subjects are nearing completion and will soon be on their way southward. By July 1st the film section headed by John Hay Whitney expects to have approximately 82 subjects in non-theatrical circulation throughout South America. Approximtely 100 other tenative productions are also being scheduled for shipment to Latin America within the next few months.

Figures on the status of production in the non-theatrical division, and an outline of future film plans were released this week by a spokesman for the films division of the Office of Inter-American Affairs.

The titles listed by the non-theatrical division are all in the educational, scientific, medical, industrial and military training fields, and are destined for exhibition from 16 mm to specially selected Latin American audiences. They are not in any sense competitive with regular commercial distribution in South America.

The aims of the non-theatrical film program as listed in the recently prepared summary of the Whitney office activities are to "reveal the military, economic and cultural aspects of the United States in a way not possible on the theatrical screen" and second, to "help Latin America improve its people's health and economy."

New Subjects Ready

The majority of the new titles cited in the report were listed in Motion Picture Herald on December 27, 1941. Additional subjects now ready in Spanish and Portugese versions are:

"Main Street on the March," an MGM Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences annual awards winner; "South American Admirals"; "Bomber"; "Teaching with Sound Film," five dental subjects, "Electrosurgery"; "Army Champions" and "Unseen Worlds."

Titles now in preparation, and hitherto unreported, include "The Home Place," "Eight Points" a study of the Pan American union, a compilation of Warner Brothers patriotic shorts, "Sons of the Conquistadores"; "About Faces"; "North American Cadets"; "Harvests for Tomorrow"; "High Over the Border," on bird migration in the western hemisphere; "Marshall Islands," a newsreel compilation; "Women for Defense"; "Diagnostic Procedure"; "Syphilis" and "Menace of the Rising Sun."

The pictures were prepared from existing theatrical, commercial, Government and scientific footage. Kenneth MacGowan, on leave from his post as producer for 20th Century-Fox is director of the non-theatrical program. With his staff he has culled almost 1,500,000 feet of film for subjects likely to interest Latin American political and cultural leaders, and to fill their requests for special technical and informative motion pictures.

Since Pearl Harbor it is reported that the Coordinator's film program has been reoriented to include subjects explaining the United Nation's war aims and the threat which the Axis holds over all the Americas. A series of militant short subjects is now being prepared, some from compilation of existing materials and some from new production.

War Themes

Subjects included are a description of the U. S. submarine offensive against Japan, types of American aircraft, "To the Last Man" a study of selective service in the U. S. and the registration of all skills for the war effort. "Seven Ocean Navy" on the ship building program, "Tanks Appear" an "American Heroes" series and others.

Specifically directed against Axis propaganda in South America are such projected titles as "Italy Is Sorry"; "Nazis and Catholic Youth"; "Short Wave Radio"; "Hitler's Broken Promises"; "Nazi Biographies"; "We Sail to Oblivion," on Nazi U-Boats; "Cardinal Faulhaber"; and "Does Nature Prefer Blondes," a Robert Benchley satire on Nazi race theories.

Scripts of these films, most of which, it is said, will be produced by professional Hollywood talent, are being prepared for the coordinator by a group of top screen writers, including Lillian Hellman, Joel Sayre, Arthur Sheekman, Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett. Philip Dunne, author of the "How Green Was My Valley," screen play is story supervisor.

Pictures taken in Latin America and now ready for distribution, non-theatrically, in the United States include: "Americans All," "Fiestas of the Hill," "Bounteous Earth," "High Spots of a High Country," "Hill Towns of Guatemala," "Brazil," "Colombia," "Venezuela," "Buenos Aires and Montevideo," "Orchids," "Wooden Faces of Totonicapan," "Our Neighbors Down the Road," "The Day Is Now," "Brazil Gets the News," "Patagonian Playground," "Sundays in the Valley of Mexico."

About Our Neighbors

Others now nearing completion are: "Freedom Rings in Haiti," "Haiti Gives," "Ecuador (2 pictures)," "Mexican Tourist Films," "Living Masks of Mayas," "Brazil," "Chile," "Know Your Neighbor," "Day of Freedom," "People of Two Worlds," "Line from Yucatan," "Jungle Quest for the Great Stone Heads," "Treasure Trove of Jade," "Chilean Ski Team," "Fire and Water," "Sky Dancers of Papantla," and "Bolivian Tin."

Plans for the formation of a non-theatrical government 16 mm distribution system in the U. S., under the Whitney office auspices are still awaiting Washington approval.

Regional and annual national sales meetings are the order now. Paramount will hold its annual meeting for four days, beginning May 4th, at Adolph Zukor's Mountain View Farm, New City, New York. Warner circuit film buyers and bookers met Tuesday at the New York home office. The distribution company of that name held a regional sales meeting in Boston last week, and in Pittsburgh Monday. Also last week, the RKO circuit held luncheon meetings for managers in Chicago and Rochester.

New season production and selling plans are to be mulled at the Paramount session, and attendants will be sales executives from home office and exchanges here and in Canada.

Mississippi "Blue" War Continues

City police of Jackson, Miss., closed the Paramount theatre in that city for the third Sunday in a row on April 26th and ordered Manager Henry Seel into municipal court the following day for a third successive fine of $50 in violation of the state's 120-year-old law forbiding Sunday shows. Mr. Seel appealed his two previous convictions to county court where he will get jury trials after being denied these constitutional rights in the city tribunal. This same blue law forbids baseball and football games, bull fights, bear baiting and cock fights in the Magnolia state and was the subject of hot discussion and two short-end losing votes in the House at the recent Legislature.

Women and older men should be trained to replace draftees, Ray C. Colvin, St. Louis, president, told the Theatre Equipment Dealers Protective Association semi-annual meeting in Chicago. The three-day meeting ended Monday night.

Other speakers were Lee McCullough of WPA; Fred Mathews of Motiograph; Harry Strong of Strong Electric; C. S. Ashcraft, Ashcraft Corp.; J. C. Schock, Baldor Electric; Oscar Neu, Neumade Products; and Jack Hammond, National Carbon Co.

Mr. McCullough said equipment manufacturers had pledged cooperation to the Government; and this was echoed by a similar vote of cooperation from the meeting.

Mr. Neu said 93 per cent of his company's facilities were devoted to war; but that civilian requirements were still met.

More than 70 attended, among them Joe Hornstein, New York; Phil Wicker, Greensboro, N. C.; Vivian Harwell, Birmingham.

Mr. Colvin was reelected president, secretary, and managing director of the association.

DELAYED BOOKINGS UNFAIR TO SUBSEQUENTS—AAA RULES

Reduces Asbury Park Margins Over Freehold Theatre; New Cases

Subsequent run theatres are entitled to a protection from excessive booking delays by the addition of contract clauses setting their clearance at a specified maximum after national or regional release dates, the Appeal Board of the Motion Picture Arbitration System ruled at New York this week in its 22nd decision.

The three members of the board awarded a further reduction in clearance to Liberty theatre, Freehold, New Jersey. John K. Watson, arbitrator of the case, New York's 16th in his award, reported on February 14th, directed Warners and RKO to cut the margins granted two Walter Reade circuit theatres, the Savoy and Lyric in Asbury Park, from 12 to one, and from 14 to three days, respectively. He maintained the 14-day margins held by the Mayfair, Paramount and St. James theatres, key Reade Asbury Park houses, over the Liberty.

The Appeal Board modified the award by eliminating clearance between the Savoy and Freehold, upheld Mr. Watson's three-day margin to the Lyric, and reduced the clearance of the Mayfair, Paramount and St. James to seven days.

Further, to protect the Liberty against delays in booking by the Asbury Park theatres the board held that the subsequent Liberty should receive pictures not later than 30 days after the completion of first run in New York City; or not later than 30 days after national release date on pictures which do not play first run at a New York first run theatre.

Resort City a Factor

The opinion, by Judge Van Vechten Veeder, Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger took cognizance of Asbury Park's character as a resort city, attracting many visitors by its hotels, bathing and other recreation facilities.

The Asbury Park theatres are but one of many attractions, the board found, expressing the belief that "Attendance at them is more likely incidental" to a visit to enjoy all the recreational offerings of the seacoast resort.

Of the many visitors, it decided that those who come from Freehold, 16 miles away are a very small percentage. The Appeal Board expressed doubt that any made the journey solely for the purpose of attending motion pictures. It found that the Liberty drew no direct patronage from Asbury Park. Nevertheless it found that the theatres are in the same competitive area, but ruled that the margins between Freehold and Asbury Park should be short.

The board found the existing 12 and 14 day margins excessive on the ground of the slight competition between the two towns. It also implied that the three first run houses, the Paramount, St. James and Mayfair were secure in their status as higher price key first runs playing shortly after New York.

UMPI STUDIES ARBITRATION

Ways of speeding up arbitration and simplifying procedure will be sought by the UMPI committee of the whole when it meets again shortly to to take final action on its trade practices plan. Arbitration and the setting up of a system to settle regional and territorial trade disputes are an important part of the five-point UMPI plan. It was reported by an UMPI leader that members of the committee were hopeful that it would be possible to eliminate much of the detail which they feel has delayed some arbitration proceedings. It was also reported possible that machinery for settling territorial and other grievances not covered by the consent decree would take advantage of the machinery now available in the 31 tribunal cities of the motion picture arbitration system. Last week the AAA reported that arbitration cases, under the consent decree rules, had taken an average of 167 days, or five and a half months to reach completion.

"A reduction in clearance should help the Liberty by affording its patrons an earlier opportunity to see pictures without in any way injuring the Asbury Park theatres for the reasons previously given. We believe that the prior run and a clearance of seven days is ample protection for the Mayfair, Paramount and St. James," the board said.

Granting a 30-day maximum clearance after national, or New York release date the board noted that it was the practice of Asbury Park theatres, although they had national release, to wait until pictures first played in New York in order to gain the benefit of metropolitan advertising.

"We think the Liberty is entitled to reasonable protection in case Asbury Park delays unreasonably to play its pictures. This principle was recognized in the Decision of the Code Authority, decided on January 17, 1935, under the NRA and, while not necessarily a precedent, seems to us to have been sound," the judges wrote.

Costs were divided equally.

Omaha

The clearance complaint Case No. 1, Omaha, filed last August, by Morris Cohn, operator of the Strand, Council Bluffs, Ia., against the five consenting companies and the Broadway, Council Bluffs, has been withdrawn following a settlement.

The specific run case filed by the Savoy Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., last December, against RKO, 20th Century-Fox and Paramount, has been withdrawn by the complainant. Terms of the settlement were not revealed. It was New York's 30th case.

Los Angeles

Cinema Enterprises, Inc., operator of the Monterey Theatre, Los Angeles, filed a combined specific run and clearance complaint under Sections VIII and X of the consent decree, at Los Angeles against Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner Bros. The complaint charges that both the Crystal and Vern Theatres, circuit houses, have been sold runs ahead of the Monterey, one of which runs was sought by the complainant. A reduction of the existing clearance of the National and Keystone over the Monterey is sought under Section VIII.

St. Louis

Boston

Ruth M. and Paul A. Hunter, Jr., operators of the Playhouse in Gorham, Maine, won a partial victory in their clearance case, Boston No. 8, against all five distributors. Garrett S. Hoag in his award on Monday upheld the 30-day margin of Portland theatres over the Star theatre, Westbrook, Me., an intervenor, but reduced the Star's margin over the Playhouse to seven days, from 30 days.

Citing Appeal Board precedent in the settlement of the Piedmont theatre clearance case in San Francisco, the arbitrator ruled that clearances between the Maine theatres should be computed from the end of run. He also ruled that the total clearance in favor of the Portland houses should not exceed 45 days, in case of delayed booking.

Costs were divided among the five distributors. Paramount was exempted from the award to the extent of decree sections granting it the right to make contracts as it sees fit with its affiliated State and Maine theatres, Portland, and the Star in Westbrook.

The tenth Boston case was filed Monday by the Princess Amusement Corporation, which asked elimination of clearance and national release date for its Middleboro theatre, in Middleboro, Mass.

All five distributors were cited as well as the M. and P. circuit, operating the Brockton theatre, and Park and Strand in Taunton; Interstate Theatres, operating the Colonial in Brockton and Plymouth and Old Colony, in Plymouth; Loew's and RKO Boston first run houses; Cape Theatres, Inc., operating the Bourne in Buzzard's Bay and Wareham and Onset theatres; and Al Rubensteink, owner of the Capitol in Middleboro and Bridgewater theatre.

Case No. 11 at Boston was a clearance demand on Tuesday by Frank M. Deane for the Colonial theatre, Manchester Depot, Vt., against MGM and RKO. He named the Paramount and Grand theatres in Rutland, which book from to participate in the event. The same night, Hearings continue on May 6th.

Nathan Rovner will arbitrate the 13th case, also by Mr. Briskin, for the State theatre at Waterloo, N. Y.

IN BRITISH STUDIOS

By AUBREY FLANAGAN

In London

The oily and begrimed figure rising from a turgid studio sea is the normally well groomed and enlightened Mr. Noel Coward, author-playwright-producer-composer and actor, currently producing, jointly with David Lean, directing and starring in the Two Cities film, "In Which We Serve", now on the floor at Denham. . . . On his first encounter with the frigid and oleaginous waters, Mr. Coward clambered out and shiveringly commented to David Lean, who is perched in the port side of the photograph, "Remind me next time to write a drawing room comedy."

War First Theme

Still convinced that the picturegoing public has a tendency to brood over its troubles, that no entertainment factor is a safer investment than the contemporary scene, the bulk of British producers remain married almost immovably to the war as a subject for current production. High explosive and international violence, adventure ashore, afloat, and in the air, drama and comedy, sensation and political dialectic all find a place in the programs current and future of the British film producer.

War pictures have made a hit—in certain obvious instances. "49th Parallel" and "Target for Tonight" are outstanding. Many others have been a complete flop. Contemporary productions with no war inspiration have made and are still making money for the British exhibitor. But few films in current production, none the less, have a setting outside the battle and the breeze. Few producers set the clock back in the quieter days before September, 1939.

In the week of writing, quietest for many months, only five films are on British studio floors. Three of these, a far lower percentage than normal, are war subjects directly and exclusively. Pictures planned for production in the immediate future, when the studios remaining to the industry have had their Spring cleaning, are almost entirely bellicose in inspiration and content. The British exhibitor will find it hard to escape the war if he does not want to escape showing British films.

Five in Work

Of the quintette at work currently, two, one an American sponsorship, are definitely and obviously escapist. Even Butcher's apparently inocuous "Rose of Tralee" has bombs bursting beneath its floral surface. The escapist subjects are Warners' comedy, now on the floor at Teddington, as yet untitled, and a new George Formby comedy for Columbia.

The new production at Warners' Teddington Studios cuts right away from war themes and evolves as farce, purely and simply. Ann Crawford, the company's "discovery," Donald Stewart, Rene Houston and Oliver Wakefield are principals, with Walter Forde directing.

The story, by Brock Williams, concerns the activities of a money-minded business man, his bored wife, a comedy countess and a satin-smooth jewel-robber. The background is a large tropical city.

New Formby

The war does not seem to ruffle the horizons of Box Office Champion George Formby's "Much Too Shy" which is at present under way at Elstree for release by Columbia. Indeed, the settings so far used by director Marcel Varnel have been exclusively bucolic, farmsteads, lone hillsides, etc. Formby's role in this latest comedy is a variegated one, his supposed talents including window cleaning, chimney sweeping, painting and walking out dogs. The noted and esteemed Formby vocalism, accompanied by the now traditional ukelele is featured.

From the peaceful vistas of this twain the attentions of producers currently move otherwise to the war. Most distinguished of the war subjects in production at present is undoubtedly Two Cities' "In Which We Serve," the Noel Coward epic of a Navy at war, in which the author-actor-producer is at one and the same time producer actor, and author, and co-director. On the set at Denham the Two Cities craftsmen have constructed a full scale model of a British destroyer on which much of the action of Coward's film unrolls. Dover Quay, canvas against which much of the post Dunkirk drama was enacted by the B. E. F. has tellingly been reconstructed in the studio.

Coward, whose exceptionally constructive methods are quite literally setting up new production records for the British industry, daily confuting the critics, scored this week yet another record of a different kind, by being the first producer director whose work has attracted a King and Queen of Great Britain to a British film studio.

Their Majesties, with their two children, visited Denham and the destroyer set this week accompanied by Lord Louis Mountbatten, inspected the set, saw sequences shot, chatted with executives and production staff, and took tea before they went back home.

Philosophy of War

The more philosophic problems provoked by war are perhaps more greatly featured in Charter Films "Thunder Rock," which is being made at Denham for release by Metro. The film is, of course, an adaptation of the stage play of the same name. Geoffrey Dell, film writer and author of the celebrated "Nobody Ordered Wolves," has done the screenplay. John Boulting produces and his brother Roy directs. Michael Redgrave, who had the lead in the London stage version, James Mason, Barbara Mullen and Lilli Palmer have principal roles.

Translating the play into screen form the Boultings have designed it with a variegated setting, with backgrounds including the League of Nations headquarters in Geneva, France, Fascist Italy, and the lighthouse on Thunder Rock wherein the play was originally set.

BRITISH INDEPENDENTS ARM FOR WAR ON CIRCUITS

Dispute with Gaumont on "GWTW" Touches Off Full Dress Policy Battle

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

War on a scale hitherto unparalleled may redden the wider horizons of the world, but the British exhibitor, without in any way lessening the intensity he gives to the greater battle, still expends no negligible energy in the minor but bitter battle of industry warfare. Seldom has the spirit of bellicosity been more marked than it is at present against the circuits.

Independent resentment, smouldering at all times, burst into flame recently against the Gaumont British group for the booking of "Gone With the Wind," a booking, it was contended, directly contrary to the C. E. A.'s policy. The battle axes have once again been flourished over the circuit heads, for the part they, it is contended, have played in regard to the new increase of entertainments tax. The two matters are to some extent involved one with the other.

Looking at the situation with a vision beyond the immediate tomorrow, it is difficult that anything really concrete will be done in either case. The war against the circuits will continue verbal rather than actual, and further forays and guerilla tactics are more likely to be local than national. "Gone With the Wind" is still being booked to some extent on terms which would seem to be within the scale laid down by the initial C. E. A. Committee. The increase of entertainments tax, proposed as a hundred per cent increase by Sir Kingsley Wood, is not likely to be cancelled, though there are chances that its incidence or indeed its form may, following conversations between the C. E. A. and Treasury, be altered.

New Tax Causes Criticism

Most crucial of the developments which have provoked further the independents' ire against the theatre groups, is the new increase of entertainments tax. It is to take the form of a hundred per cent increase on all grades, states Sir Kingsley Wood, and to apply to all entertainments without reservation. On the Chancellor's own admission the bulk of the revenue it will bring in will come from the motion picture industry. The industry, he states, brings in 90 per cent of the revenue derived under the heading of Entertainments tax. It is estimated that the increase would yield the Exchequer £12,000,000 this year and £14,000,000, in a complete twelve months period.

A noteworthy fact in this regard is Sir Kingsley's suggestion that practically a quarter of all attendances at cinemas are for seats at the present admission—inclusive of tax—of 1s 5d—irrespective of any further increase decided on under the C. E. A.'s proposal for an all-round admission increase this year.

The Chancellor's proposal came as a distinct shock to the industry, was far heavier in its blow than had been expected. It was widely believed that any new tax would take the form not of an all-round increase, but of a percentage levy on the exhibitor's gross turnover. This latter formula would not have been taken ill by exhibitors, unless the percentage was exorbitant. It would have been practical, mechanically easy, and, they claim, would have operated equitably all around. On the other hand, to merely increase the tax by 100 per cent on all grades produces an immediate complication. The addition of such figures as a penny farthing or two pence three farthings or other amounts would mean the institution of impracticable prices. (There are no fractions of a penny in the entertainment world of Britain.)

LATEST FILMS FOR AEF IN IRELAND

American troops, stationed in Northern Ireland, will view the latest films from the United States before they are released in England, according to a plan devised by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association. A provision of the plan, however, states that no civilians are to be admitted to such showings. The Kinematograph Renters Society has taken a similar stand with respect to showings for British soldiers.

Incidentally, British exhibitors had already decided on the increased scale of admissions and were advised to withhold arranging it until they had heard the Budget proposals. Now it is clear that to set up even slight increases over and above the new taxation would complicate matters considerably, because an extra halfpenny or penny would bring many admission rates into the higher taxation class.

It is clear that simple as it may seem to the uninitiated, the whole matter will have to be threshed out carefully and in the greatest detail. The promise of Sir Wilfred Eady, Treasury spokesman, that he would be glad to see the exhibitors again, and discuss difficulties with them, is likely to be taken up, and the C. E. A. tax committee will seek an interview and put to him the complexities of the situation.

Action Undecided

Whether they will merely ask for the incidence of the tax to be altered to a more mechanically practicable scale, or whether they will press for the percentage on turnover plan has yet to be decided. They feel that they cannot now refuse to bear the burden thrust on them during such a crucial period, but that since it is the total the Exchequer is after there may well be a case for arguing how that total is to be achieved. Admissions have to go up, and the tax to go on. Remains now how to solve the problem of marrying the two purposes.

Readiness of the exhibitor in general to shoulder a new financial burden, a readiness characteristic of his whole attitude to the war effort, has not in any way dimmed the independent animosity to the circuits over the tax question—and "Gone With the Wind."

It is freely understood that the first steps towards an all-round increase of admissions were taken by the circuits. It is an established fact that they declared publicly their intention of putting up the prices, even devised a detailed scale to which they committed themselves, no matter what the action taken by the other 3,000 odd picture house operators.

This, coupled with the open bragging by the larger theatre groups about the business done recently and currently, declaration of immense profits and—until this last year, of huge dividends—is interpreted by the independents as having played into the Chancellor's hands by persuading him that the industry was riding high on a wave of prosperity, and ripe for further financial plucking. The Gaumont British role in booking "Gone With the Wind" and planning increased admissions wherever the picture is to be shown has been read as a direct invocation to the Treasury to come along armed with a pair of pliers, a fine tooth comb and a stomach pump.

Had it not been for this swaggering exhibitionism, declare the independents, the tax increase would almost certainly have been much lower than it has now proved to be.

Resent "GWTW' Rental

Resentment among the independents against G. B. for booking "Gone With the Wind" has been intense and widespread. Since last month, when the news was divulged, exhibitor groups throughout the country have been the scene of the fiercest criticism, not only of the circuits, but of the C. E. A.'s officers for their part in the matter. This month at the General Council it blazed into full fury when criticisms and denunciations which had been made in the provinces and elsewhere were made with as much vigor and as little mincing of words vis a vis Commander Jarratt, the alleged villain of the piece.

So intense was the resentment against Gaumont for supposedly going contrary to the association's policy, and violating the terms of the resolution advising members not to book the film save at a lower rental, that a formal effort was made in the Council to secure the expulsion of Gaumont British from the C. E. A. The movement, however, did not find sufficient support, and G. B. remain where they are, even, if anything, a little stronger.

Whether "Gone With the Wind" will harvest any but a merger crop of box office corn remains to be seen. Social conditions have altered considerably since the film was first presented to the trade. Four hours is considerably more than the vast bulk of the working populace can contribute nowadays to entertainment. Most office workers seldom leave work before six o'clock, the same hours obtain with shop employees, and many factory and munition workers close down even later, from a day shift. Allowing for an evening meal, travelling, queueing, etc., at the very least another hour is disposed of. Few, if any, cinemas are open after 10 o'clock. How, then, is the patron going to see the four-hour film with a very maximum of three hours at his or her disposal Even as it is, restricted bus services and late buses will compel many to leave for home before 10 P. M. The number of people able to go to the cinema during the day is notoriously small. Remains the weekend. Whether that will suffice the exhibitor's needs—and those of Metro—is a matter for speculation.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

Esteemed Editor:

It is in large measure to your friend Pete Smith that the press, trade, public and nation owe the establishment of a monthly preview of short subjects in Hollywood under sponsorship of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

It is to his experience acquired during a youth devoted to pursuit of the art and science of publicity that the enterprise, which gets under way May 13th, owes a format which is preassurance of benefit to all parties at interest.

The primary objective of the shorts preview is, of course, to bring about the return of the short subject to that place in the scheme of things theatrical from which it has been shunted in recent years by forces external, oblique and casual.

What happened to the short subject when the two-feature program policy swept over large areas of the exhibition map is nobody's secret.

It vanished from more screens than was good for it or them.

Quite coincidentally, but disastrously, this land of sunshine and habitat of the syndicated columnist, filmnews reporter and magazine correspondent happened to be a place where the two-feature program policy throve to such an extent that the ladies and gentlemen who write pieces about the screen for the nation's theatregoers virtually never got to see a short subject in the normal course of their activities.

It vanished, therefore, from the running news of the art-industry as purveyed to the public by some 350 scribes who, it should be noted, were quite unmindful of their dereliction.

Short Subject Blackout

Upshot of these coincidences has been an approximately complete blackout of short subject publicity aggravating a partial blackout of short subject exhibition.

It was to this state of affairs that Pete Smith addressed his attentions some months ago, and it was by way of working out ways and means for correcting it that he conferred with other short subjects producers and uttered a preliminary announcement of screenings to come.

It may be remarked parenthetically that this state of affairs takes on new significance and implication in a wartime emergency under which the nation's government has elected to convey information to the nation's people via the medium of the short subject.

Just what fraction of the nation's people might be expected to view the 26 shorts arranged for by U. S. Coordinator of Films Lowell Mellett, under conditions prevailing heretofore, is a matter of distressing speculation.

The Academy shorts previews foreshadow extensive correction of publicity, and it is reasoned that correction of exhibition practice may be expected to ensue as result of the application of the law of demand and supply.

The entire Hollywood contingent of correspondents, numbering some 360 and inclusive of the foreign press, are to attend the screenings.

The exhibitions are to be held at the Filmarte theatre, centrally located and commodious.

Each program is to be made up of 14 reels, to consist of two reels (two one-reelers or one two-reeler) supplied by each of the seven shorts-producing studios as its best product of the month.

That a lifting of the publicity blackout will follow immediately is regarded as a certainty.

That readers will make inquiry of exhibitors regarding exhibition date of the product they read about is considered a dependable eventuation.

That exhibitors will supply to customers the product inquired for would seem to be plain business procedure.

PRODUCTION EASES

Production eased a bit, on the week, with fifteen pictures clearing the cameras, while only ten took their place on the stages. The easement is something in the nature of an offset to the recurrent but repeatedly dispelled report that studios are rushing production for the purpose of amassing a backlog of stock against the possibility of governmental curtailment of materials.

Doubtless there is no way of determining with accuracy the extent to which Columbia's guest-star trailer has contributed to the thriving gross of the imported "Invaders," but there are signs that the company rates it considerable.

It was Cary Grant, Jean Arthur and Ronald Colman, stars of the then in-the-making "Talk of the Town," who appeared with director George Stevens in the Hollywood-made trailer for the Britain-made "Invaders," in which they do not appear, speaking eloquently of their enjoyment of the picture.

Now Laurence Olivier and Leslie Howard, stars of "The Invaders," are to appear in a Britain-made trailer for the Hollywood-made "Talk of the Town," which is in the nature of a reciprocal gesture at bottom and yet may turn out to be also a precedent of proportions.

Although no statement of intention to perpetuate the policy has been made, the idea possesses merits of practicability which declare themselves.

For quite some while the House of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has been permitting its writers to plant the names of its stars in the dialogue of pictures in which they do not appear, and audiences have manifested relish for these allusions.

Twentieth Century-Fox has engaged intermittently in the same practice, with the same result, and Paramount has crossed company lines on a number of occasions to mention other studios' stars whose names have happened to fit into dialogue.

One effect of the device is to humanize, in a singularly direct and offhand way, an individual commonly regarded as more actor than person.

It is of service, too, as a means of keeping fresh in audience consciousness the personnel absent in line of wartime duty.

Abuse could destroy it, but care in application can make it one of the most useful tools in the screen craftsman's kit.—W.R.W.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

United Artists is having trouble with armed Nazis in Paraguay, down in South America, where there are reported to be considerable pro-Fascist influences holding out in certain rural sectors.

Last week the company was all set to put on a big opening at Asuncion for "The Dictator," highlighting the Chaplin rib of that be-moustached guy who holds forth in Berlin. Nazi agents made one attempt to seize the print of the film, but failed. In this attack, they stole a film-delivery truck which later was found intact, presumably because it did not contain the "Dictator" picture. On the following day, last Thursday, they attacked custodians of the print, assaulted them and made away with it. Another copy is on its way to Asuncion.

Universal, last week, went all the way to Waco, Texas, to put on a big Hollywood opening for a short subject.

"U's" current "Stranger Than Fiction" single-reeler features the little Tom Thumb Church in Waco, and Universal staged a special "premiere" in Waco for the event, featuring the Honorable Lee O'Daniel famed bible-selling United States Senator from Texas. The Senator has sold as many as 30,000 copies of the Bible in a month. He gave free Bibles to all those who attended the "Stranger Than Fiction" showing.

The war outlook is really getting serious. Last week's order by the War Production Board banning the manufacture of non-commercial fishing tackle doused the glimmering hopes of those few remaining salt water angler diehards in the eastern film sector who have held out these many years against the invasion of golf and gin rummy in the hobby lobby of stalwarts.

The Government had already stopped the making of tennis balls and golf balls, and now, as if to appease the film whackers of tennis and golf balls, they have taken away the rods and reels of those salty sons of Sundays at sea. But, then, unless Uncle Sam takes away the sea, or the right thereto, as he is likely to, the stalwarts will probably be found whittling down some choice branches of sturdy trees as in the days of Huckleberry Finn.

Loew's, in New York, is picking key houses in which to experiment with various machinations to stimulate the sale of War Stamps in preparation for the nationwide drive in theatres, starting May 30th. Bill (William Anderson) Orr, executive at MGM's home office, once had charge of New York State's prisons. And Paul (National Screen of Dallas) Short is a full-blooded Cherokee Indian, born on a North Carolina Indian reservation.

ALBERT DAVIS, 80, owner of one of the world's largest collections of theatre memorabilia, died the other day at his home in Brooklyn, New York.

London-born, Davis, who retired from his theatrical sign business 20 years ago, started his accumulation at 13. His first item was an autographed photo of Edwin Booth, which he obtained from the actor when the latter was appearing at the Detroit Opera House.

After a few years of autograph-collecting at the stage door of the Detroit, Davis decided that he, too, would become an actor. With another youth from his neighborhood, he formed the comedy team of Davis and Kelly.

Following his marriage, Davis shifted to New York and established himself as a theatre sign painter. He remained in this business until 20 years ago, when his collection influenced him to retire to give all his attention to his mementoes.

The collection, representing 65 years of hobbying, consists of 100,000 photos, more than 100,000 programs and 50,000 lithographs and miscellaneous items.

Other than the prized Booth photo, the aged theatre devotee regarded a photo of Lillian Russell in tights as the best item he had.

One of his favorite anecdotes told of the day Lillian Russell and Sam Bernard visited his shop and asked for the photo. Miss Russell told him at the time it was the only such photo extant, and that she would pay high for it so that she may rip it up. Davis shrugged off the money and handed her the photo. (It wasn't until after Miss Russell's death that he revealed that he had a copy of the photo.)

The top floor of the 12th St. home was entirely devoted to theatre photos. Among them are the great and the near great of three generations of American trouping: minstrels, legitimate stars, circus performers, soubrettes, even circus headliners.

Davis' collection was first brought to the attention of the public when he interested Oscar Hammerstein in it. Hammerstein selected a number of unusual photos of Yvette Guilbert, whom he was then presenting at the Olympia Theatre, and exhibited them in the lobby. As payment Davis received a rare picture of Hammerstein.

One of the choice parts of his collection was a file of hundreds of photos presented to him by a drama critic. The photos represented a pictorial history of the New York stage from 1870 to 1890. Another section was obtained from John Wood, who owned a studio on the Bowery. Among the 400 plates he received from Wood was a picture of Sullivan's challenge to Jake Kilrain, dated December 7, 1888.

Another corner of Davis' collection dealt with the opera, an alcove of his home containing 22,000 pictures. In it is the photo of every singer, conductor, manager and impresario ever connected with the operatic stage in the last 50 years.

Theatre owners who run vaudeville or stage shows smay not be able to hire magicians any more since the war priority order taboo-ing pockets and extra hiding spaces inside men's suits. Russell Swann, magician president of the newly incorporated Master Magicians of America, in New York, has placed on top of the organization's agenda the assignment to get pockets back for magicians, the legerdemain boys needing plenty of pockets in their outfits to conceal army jeeps, rabbits, barrels, barrage balloons, toothpicks and other sleight-of-hand appurtenances. Meantime Mr. Swann and his magicians will just have to hope—just like the rest of us.

And while on the subject of men's pockets, it seems there is under consideration in this great war effort, a plan for giving war and war entertainment first search of the public's pants under a scheme put forward by a New York cleaner and dyer. Should the proposal be adopted, all cash found in clothes, sent to tailors, cleaners and laundries, would be turned over to Army and Navy Relief, the USO and the Red Cross.

Proponent of the plan is Phil Cooper, New York, who has discovered that some $11,865 was left in garments last year. Eighty-five per cent was returned to owners and the rest, he says, turned over to civilian charities.

Most frequent coin found is the dime and Mr. Cooper can think up a reason for this—it's so small it's easily overlooked. But he can't account for the man—a Brooklynite—who left a dead mackerel in his pocket.

Charles Skouras Elected National Theatres Head

Directors of the National Theatres Corporation and the National Theatres Amusement Company elected Charles P. Skouras president of both companies at board meetings in New York on Thursday. He succeeds his brother, Spyros, who resigned to become president of 20th Century-Fox.

Charles Skouras retains his post as president of Fox West Coast Theatres. He returned to his Los Angeles home immediately following the board meetings. He expressed satisfaction with the present functioning of the two theatre companies and said he contemplated no immediate change in personnel or policy.

The meeting did not decide whether National Theatres home office would be moved to Los Angeles or remain in New York. Mr. Skouras indicated, however, that he does not plan to move his home from Los Angeles. Mr. Skouras fills the place on the board of directors left by the death of Sydney Kent.

Directors present at the meeting included Spyros Skouras, Charles Skouras, Henry Cox, Hermann Place, H. D. Campbell, J. R. Dillon, Earl G. Hines and W. C. Michel. A. S. Gambee, National Theatres vice-president; J. P. Edmondson, secretary, and Richard F. Dwight, counsel, also attended.

Mr. Skouras entered exhibition in St. Louis with his brothers, Spyros and George. He later was active in the management of the Warner circuit, which acquired his St. Louis holdings. In 1930 he joined Paramount theatres, leaving to direct Metropolitan theatres in New York City, from whence he moved to Fox West Coast.

May Name Ricketson

In New York this week it was reported that Mr. Skouras would bring Frank (Rick) Ricketson, head of the Fox Intermountain division of National Theatres, to New York from Denver as eastern operating head of the National circuit. This would permit Mr. Skouras, the president, to remain in Los Angeles, in charge of Fox West Coast, the largest of the National Theatres divisions.

Division heads discussed the proposed changes in operations headquarters from New York to California at meetings in New York last week. Among those present were Arch Bowles, San Francisco; Elmer C. Rhoden, Kansas City; Harold J. Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; Frank Newman, Seattle; Mr. Ricketson, Denver; and David Idzal, Detroit.

Mr. Ricketson has been associated with Spyros and Charles Skouras in National Theatres since about 1930 as chief of the Intermountain division. Previously he had been division manager for the Hughes-Franklin circuit in Kansas City, in other theatre operations, and a newspaperman.

Fitzgibbons Details FP Gains, War Work

Famous Players in 1941 Paid Over $5,500,000 in Taxes of All Kinds

The financial position of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., was strengthened during the year 1941, shareholders were told by J. J. Fitzgibbons, president, at the annual meeting held at the head office in Toronto last week.

He said that Famous Players and its subsidiary and affiliated companies, during the year have paid to the Dominion, Provincial and City Governments throughout Canada a total of more than $5,500,000 in taxes of all kinds, including amusement taxes, which is equivalent to more than three and one-half the net earnings which were available for distribution to the shareholders of these companies.

Because of deductions for taxes, the net earnings of the company show only a slight increase over the previous year.

Officers Elected

The annual meeting of the board of directors was held at the same time and the following officers were elected: Mr. Fitzgibbons, president and managing director; R. W. Bolstad, vice-president and treasurer; N. G. Barrow, secretary; L. G. Geering and J. A. Troyer, assistant secretaries, and A. MacCunn and W. E. Kerr, assistant treasurers.

Elected to the board of directors were Mr. Fitzgibbons, Mr. Bolstad, Barney Balaban, Mr. Barrow, Wendell Farris, Stanton Griffis, Austin Keough, Mr. MacCunn, N. S. Robertson and H. P. Robinson.

Mr. Fitzgibbons stated that rapid changes in the social life of the public have been reflected in the greater demand for comedy, melodrama and action pictures, "The great transition," he said, "from peacetime manufacturing to wartime production of heavy industry is one of the outstanding achievements in Canadian history. The motion picture has played an important part in recording this achievement for posterity."

Will Maintain Product

"Despite the difficulties of operating under wartime conditions," Mr. Fitzgibbons said, "we are confident that the industry in England and the United States will be able to maintain a production sufficient to assure a continuous flow of the very best motion picture entertainment for our theatres throughout Canada.

"Our company has long term franchises and contracts that assure the patrons of our theatres in these troublesome times a choice of the very latest and best talking motion pictures made.

"We look into the future with great confidence and we pledge this company to every activity that will justify the continued success of the motion picture industry in a wartime economy. We are grateful to our employees throughout Canada who each week are making regular purchases out of their salaries of War Savings Stamps and Certificates. We are proud of the amount of Victory Bonds for which these same employees have subscribed."

Mr. Fitzgibbons revealed that Famous Players and its affiliates spent last year in direct wages to employees in excess of $4,400,000, and that supplies, fuel, power, etc., purchased exceeded $1,750,000, which figure in its turn was distributed amongst wage earners, merchants and others supplying materials.

Advertising Expenditures

The company and its affiliates, he said, also spent in excess of $825,000 paid in newspaper advertising and nearly $600,000 in other forms of advertising, much of which, he said, was in the form of labor to artists and in the purchase of materials, as well as over $1,000,000 paid to repair men and construction people and equipment manufacturers of various kinds. "All these monies went back into the pockets of Canadians," Mr. Fitzgibbons pointed out.

In conclusion, Mr. Fitzgibbons said:

"In every country the motion picture is recognized by the government as a powerful and essential voice in reaching the people; but in dictator countries the screen has been corrupted by being turned into a slave of the dictators to issue their propaganda. In countries like our own the screen is the free but willing ally of the peoples' government in spreading the truth about our institutions, while at the same time, it is at liberty to play its primary role of entertaining and inspiring its audiences.

"The motion picture screen must be preserved vigorous and intact to play its important role in the world reconstruction that must follow after peace with victory and to this end we pledge our services."

Bolstad Elected Head Of Canadian Circuit

R. W. Bolstad was elected president of Eastern Theatres, Ltd., at the annual meeting held in Toronto last week. He formerly was vice-president and treasurer of the company, and succeeds J. J. Fitzgibbons, who resigned. Mr. Fitzgibbons is president of Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

N. G. Barrow was named vice-president and will continue as secretary. A. MacCunn was elected treasurer, and J. J. Taylor was elected a director, succeeding Mr. Fitzgibbons.

Set RKO Golf Tourney

The RKO Radioites at the home office will usher in the spring golf season with a tournament on Thursday, May 14th, at the Westchester Country Club, Rye, N. Y. The War Bond Tournament, as the committee on arrangement has named it, will be open to the industry at large. On the committee are Senator J. Henry Walters, chairman; John Farmer, treasurer; Al Dawson, Lou Gaudreau, Dick Gavin and Robert Sherman.

Canada Shows War Films on 16 mm. Circuit

An experiment in bringing films about Canada at war, by means of traveling 16 mm. theatres, to isolated areas, was launched this winter by the National Film Board of Canada. By April 1, 1942, 40 such theatres were in operation, serving farm audiences of over 250,000 each month. This makes an estimated circulation, for a twelve month period, of 3,000,000 persons.

Co-operating with the Film Board are the Dominion Office of Public Information, and the Canadian Council of Education for Citizenship. In addition, eight provincial Departments of Education and seven University Departments of Extension are assisting in this venture. Most of the costs are met by funds provided by the Office of Public Information.

Tours Rural Areas

Each circuit plays approximately 20 communities, returning to the same community each month on a given day. There are afternoon showings for children and evening ones for adults. Community participation has proved encouraging; already locally sponsored talkies and forum discussions are accompanying the film showings.

Many commercial 16 mm. projectionists who are normally unemployed during the winter and spring months have been hired as operators. These men serve remote districts by train, by automobile, and sometimes during snow storms by sleigh. Where electric power is not available, portable generating units are used.

Films produced by the Film Board, along with a few war items from Australia and Great Britain, make up the programs. The theme of the opening presentation in January was "Peoples of Canada." There then followed programs about the Commonwealth Air Training Plan and Canadian armament production. In April, several films about the Navy and a new educational picture about the MacKenzie River district of the Canadian sub-arctic were shown. A special teaching film is also added each month for schools.

In general the circuits have been restricted entirely to rural areas. Only here and there are villages or towns of as many as one thousand inhabitants included. The films therefore go to regions which do not usually see motion pictures; in fact, one report from the Lac St. Jean district in Quebec states that over ninety per cent of the audience had never heard or seen a sound film before.

In each community served, a committee was formed in advance to arrange for a hall, to conduct publicity, and, in cooperation with the Canadian Council of Education for Citizenship, to choose a speaker to give a few remarks to accompany the films. Posters and lecture notes for speakers are sent to these committees well ahead of time.

The original plan for the circuits was that thirty of them should be organized by January, 1942. This ambition was not only accomplished by the date set, but in addition, by February, an extra four circuits were in operation. Now by April the number has increased to forty-three, with every possibility of further growth.

The travelling 16 mm. theatres are distributed as follows:

British Columbia 3, Alberta 7, Saskatchewan 10, Monitoba 4, Ontario 5, Quebec 7, New Brunswick 4, Prince Edward Island 1, Nova Scotia 2.

The average attendance in February was over 1,500 a week on each circuit.

Library of Congress to Keep Important Films

MacCleish Inaugurates Motion Picture Section to Preserve Features

A national film library to preserve the screen classics produced in the United States is the aim of Archibald MacCleish, poet, Librarian of Congress and now head of the Office of Facts and Figures, it was revealed this week.

Exercising his jurisdiction over copyright procedure, Mr. MacCleish is taking steps to secure prints of all "important" pictures for preservation in a national film repository at Washington. Plans for the film library were revealed by Edwin P. Kilroe, 20th Century-Fox attorney and chairman of the distributors' copyright committee.

Mr. MacCleish approached the industry about six months ago, Mr. Kilroe said, with the request that a plan be devised to preserve, in a central repository the principal film features, short subjects and newsreels produced by U. S. companies. Working with the copyright committee of the industry Library of Congress officials have devised a system by which notable pictures, requested by a Library reviewing committee, will be stored in the official copyright archives at Washington.

Prints under the agreement reached between the companies and the library will be presented after the picture in question has completed its national release. This will spare the distributors the expense of a special print manufactured solely for the library archives.

Under copyright statutes in effect since 1912 motion pictures must be submitted to the Librarian of Congress for examination before a copyright may be issued. Lack of storage facilities for film has hitherto made such procedure little more than a formality, companies generally submitting only a few frames of film from the title and credits, and a synopsis along with the copyright application.

These, or the complete picture, when submitted, were usually examined, entered in the copyright record and then returned to the distributor.

Film Vault Prepared

In the case of books, magazines, literary works or musical compositions, Mr. Kilroe noted that the copyright law required the filing of two copies of the work with the Librarian of Congress. These are retained in the library's permanent collection if important, or, if trivial, returned to the author, he said.

This provision in the law for file copies has made the Library of Congress one of the greatest research and bibliographical collections in the world. Mr. MacCleish pointed out to the industry that if provision had been made for a film repository many classics of the early screen now lost might still be available for research students.

The nation's chief Librarian has already started work on the acquisition of a film vault where films may be stored safely and in conditions calculated to preserve them for a maximum period of time. It is expected that facilities will be available within the year for the reception of the pictures selected.

Under the agreement the motion picture industry will screen all films for a Library representative at the time of release. Pictures which because of content, artistic value or production distinction are considered to have future reference value will be singled out by the Library reviewers and prints stored in the national vaults when the run is completed.

Shorts, Newsreels Included

A schedule worked out between the Library and the distributors calls for the depositing of prints of features eight months after their release dates. Short subjects will be filed at the library a year after their release. Newsreels will be deposited three months after release, Mr. Kilroe said. It is possible that a compilation of the best footage from each of the five principal newsreels will be filed, rather than separate prints of each issue.

Mechanics for the screening of the pictures and the cataloguing of prints still are to be worked out, Mr. Kilroe said. He indicated, however, that Library representatives would probably see the films at Washington exchanges or trade showings.

The files of the film library will be available only to bona fide researchers in the motion picture field, Mr. MacCleish indicated. The repository will contain facilities for viewing pictures in projection rooms and through desk film viewers, it was said.

The Librarian of Congress in announcing the establishment of the film collection noted that it would be the world's first such comprehensive Government film library.

Hungerford Duties Assumed by Smith

Thomas Hungerford, for the last 11 years supervisor of the Essaness Theatre Corporation's Oak Park and Northwest districts, in Chicago, has resigned to devote his time to private interests. Ralph Smith, who has been supervising the south and west side districts, succeeds Mr. Hungerford and in addition will retain the Michigan and Crown theatres of his old division. Stanley Krueger, who was manager of the American theatre, has taken over the territory formerly handled by Mr. Smith.

Other changes in the circuit are: Elbert Truesdale, from assistant to manager of the American; Edward Kennelly, from manager of the Mode to manager of the Davis; Howard Burns from manager of the Davis to manager of the Town, Cicero, Ill., and Allan Marshall, from manager of the Town to manager of the Mode.

Seattle Film Personnel

Irving Berry, formerly assistant to Albert Fink of the Evergreen Theatres in Oregon, has replaced Frank Christie as film buyer for Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres in Seattle. The new head booker of Universal's Seattle exchange is Harry Frampton, Jr. Arthur Snyder has joined the Warner Bros. sales staff in the Washington territory.

Mexico Plans Color Films

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

Alonso Sanchez Tello, one of the first producers in Mexico, has completed details for the start of what will be the pioneer Mexican full length film in colors, "La Panchita" (Saucy Little Frances), a comedy drama. Shooting is expected to start soon. Several shorts in colors have been made by Mexicans during the past few years.

A second color feature is planned for the near future by Ismael and Roberto Rodriguez who have gone to Hollywood to arrange details for the picture, which is particularly adapted to colors. Its theme is about romantic Michoacan state and will be titled "Que Lindo es Michoacan ("How Beautiful Is Michoacan").

With better times, in the way of response at home and broad and money assured to complete their programs, the producers now estimate that they will be able to make at least 80 films this year. The previous estimate was about 70. Production in 1942 is seen as far exceeding that of last year.

Mexico's first film bank, the Banco Cinematografica, S.A., is now installed in its permanent headquarters at Ejido Street, No. 26, on the local film row. Recently opened, the bank had been functioning in temporary quarters.

Antonio Espinosa de los Monteros, president of the bank, has announced that the institution is soon to raise its capital to $1,000,000 from the initial $600,000 which was provided by the industry, the Government and some private banks here. The increased capital, the official said, will enable Mexican producers to do more business with the United States as they will be able to adapt their pictures more to American audiences.

Ground is being broken in a fashionable residential district here by a syndicate of businessmen of San Luis Potosi City, important central community, for the erection of a theatre, details of which have not yet been disclosed.

Guillermo (Jimmy) Urbina, for some years manager of United Artists here, has presented his resignation so that he will be able to go to Buenos Aires and establish an exchange for the exclusive distribution of Mexican pictures there. Sr. Urbina is expected to leave for the Argentine some time in May. He has followed the example of Gustave Mohme, for many years the 20th-Fox manager here, who resigned some time ago to engage in the distribution of Mexican pictures in the United States. Mr. Mohme, returned here for a short stay, said 26 Mexican pictures had been booked for exhibition in the United States during the rest of this year. For next year he expects bookings to average one a week.

Gonzalo Elvira, widely known in local film circles, is organizing a production company here with the Spanish business men, Jesus Gil and Victor Cano Ruiz. The new company is expected to start production before the end of the coming summer, with "Linda" ("Pretty"), based upon the work of the poet Miguel N. Lira, winner of a medal donated by the local municipal government as the best stage comedy presented here in 1941. Jorge Negrete, Sofia Alvarez and Isabela Corona have been signed as the leading players.

CIO's Office Guild Drives for Managers

Entering a new field, the CIO's United Office and Professional Workers of America this week asked the Warner circuit for recognition as the bargaining agency for managers, assistant managers, and treasurers in six northern New Jersey cities, Newark, Irvington, Union, Union City, Hoboken, and Jersey City. One hundred men are affected of whom, the union asserts, a majority are members.

The union's Local 109, Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, has organized for over a year in distributor home offices, winning recognition at Loew's, Columbia, and Twentieth Century-Fox. The workers claimed are clerical. It was understood the UOPWA would establish a separate local for the managers.

Negotiate on Exchanges

Negotiations for new two-year contracts between exchanges and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees' Film Exchange Employees Union still proceed in New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo, and Cincinnati; but Richard Walsh, president, said these would be concluded shortly. Contracts have been signed in other key cities.

Mr. Walsh added that negotiations with the American Federation of Musicians might be resumed for the mutual assistance pact abrogated March 15th by the AFM after 29 years.

Conferences at New York home offices continued this week over a contract with Local 306, the city's projectionists' union, for operators in home office booths.

Motion Picture Laboratory Technicians Local 702 talked with Paramount this week on the demand for a closed shop at the Long Island studio.

Twenty-seven Broadway legitimate theatres were picketed for six hours Saturday by the American Federation of Labor's Building Service Employees Union, Local 54, representing porters and cleaners, seeking a 20 per cent pay boost. Pickets withdrew before the matinee when the strike was settled by an agreement to confer this week.

Gerald Griffin, removed three weeks ago as executive secretary to the American Guild of Variety Artists, last week formally denied the right of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, parent actors' union, to remove him.

Bate in Charge of NBC Department

Fred Bate, who since 1932 has been director of the National Broadcasting Company's staff in western Europe, has been named head of the NBC International Division by Frank E. Mullen, vice-president and general manager. He will be in charge of shortwave broadcasts to Europe, South America and the rest of the world. He succeeds John W. Elwood, recently transferred to the Pacific Coast Division for special assignments under Sidney N. Strotz.

Mr. Bate went abroad to study in 1912. In 1919, he became associated with the Reparations Commission serving in Vienna as general secretary of the Austrian Section until 1921. He later joined the United States' unofficial delegation and also served as secretary of the Reparations Conference. Mr. Bate was badly wounded in a London air raid. He returned to his post in London after recuperating in this country but came to the United States on leave a few weeks ago.

'I.Q.' Broadcasts Earn Top Theatre Grosses

Advertising Agency Claims High Attraction Power for Radio-Stage Shows

"Some of the biggest grosses in their histories," according to an advertising agency, are being earned for key city first run motion picture theatres by a popular radio quiz program which broadcasts from their stages.

This boxoffice success by "Dr. I. Q." was described at New York recently by John C. Morrow, vice president of the Grant Advertising Company, the agency which presents the broadcast from theatres under the sponsorship of Vitamins Plus, Inc., a Vick Chemical Company subsidiary. Weekly, on Monday nights, the half hour radio question and answer program is broadcast from the stage of one of the country's largest theatres, via a nationwide National Broadcasting Company hookup.

'Standing Room Only'

Consistently the program has played to standing room only in 1,500 to 3,000-seat theatres, Mr. Morrow said. It first started broadcasting from a "cinema circuit" three years ago. He cited the program's success as instance of the related audience appeal of radio and the screen.

The program has been picked up weekly from the largest theatres, generally principal first run houses, in such cities as Cleveland, San Francisco, Seattle, Dallas, Buffalo and others of approximately the same population. Currently it originates from a different theatre every week, moving across the country in one night stands at towns designated by the Vitamins sponsor. Previously, under the sponsorship of Mars, Inc, a Chicago candy maker, it played extended runs up to six weeks in each city. Then, too, house records were smashed on broadcast nights, the agent said.

The broadcast plays both circuit and independent theatres, Mr. Morrow said. The sponsor usually selects the largest theatre in a designated town. He asserted that managers have never missed an opportunity to book the broadcast, and the advertiser and agency have been offered as much as $2,000 for a broadcast.

However, "Dr. I. Q.," played by Jimmy McClain, is booked into theatres, by the radio agency and sponsors, without charge to exhibitors. In exchange for the program and its boost to grosses theatre men provide advance exploitation locally, and supply props, an advance trailer, paper, several hundred passes for the sponsor's local distributors and about a dozen passes for the following week's show. The latter are awarded to contestants.

Agency Provides Equipment

The advertising agency pays for the installation of special telephone lines into the theatre, and all radio charges. It also provides the program itself and prize money for contestants selected at random by announcers with portable microphones in balcony and orchestra of the theatre. Prizes run up to $200 for correct answers to a set of six questions. The quiz contest does not trespass lottery or anti-bank night laws.

The theatre is promoted by the radio program a week in advance of a booking by a mention in the preceding town that the show will be broadcast from such and such a theatre the following week. The announcement, plus a brief screen trailer in the theatre and a line in the theatre's regular newspaper advertising invariably brings a packed house, Mr. Morrow said. In the course of the broadcast the theatre receives an additional free plug when Dr. I. Q. awards two tickets to the theatre's next show to each contestant. The titles of pictures are not mentioned.

As part of its contribution to exploitation the theatre undertakes to write to local retailers of the vitamin product notifying them of the broadcast and urging them to call it to the attention to their customers. This provides a helpful tie-in for the theatre program and augments the regular mailing list of the theatre with a list of retailers who generally post both the theatre bill and the display pieces sent by the sponsor, the agent said.

Lines Remain

Telephone lines installed in the theatres for the program are left intact in theatres after the broadcast and they remain the property of the agency. This permits a return engagement policy. Also, Mr. Morrow admitted, they are frequently made available for theatre sponsored or special event broadcasts from the houses. He was reluctant to discuss the details of such special permissions, but made it clear that directly competitive radio broadcasts were never allowed over the facilities.

In the first three years on the air the "Dr. I. Q." program was broadcast on an extended run policy, staying in one theatre for from three to six weeks. Now, under the Vitamins Plus aegis it plays one night stands only, is reaching many more cities, and playing return engagements, Mr. Morrow explained.

Among the principal theatres and cities in which the program has appeared recently, "aiding boxoffice in every instance," according to Mr. Morrow are: The Stanley, in Philadelphia; Metropolitan in Houston; Shea's Buffalo; the Seattle Olympic; Fox St. Louis; Grauman's Chinese in Hollywood; the Capitol in New York; Stanley in Pittsburgh; Palace in Dallas and theatres in Billings, Mont., Des Moines, Cleveland, Detroit and elsewhere.

Bethel with Republic

William Bethel, formerly with Columbia Pictures in Philadelphia, last week joined the Republic exchange as a salesman, replacing Norman Silverstein, who went into the Army.

Supply Company Bought

Sound Systems of St. Louis last week purchased the Cooperative Sound Service and Supply Co., Inc.

Newsreels Study Consolidated Export Plan

A consolidated foreign newsreel, combining the best footage of all five United States news film companies, is being discussed as a solution to wartime export problems, it was learned in New York this week. A weekly international newsreel release would largely supplant individual export issues outside the Western hemisphere, it was reported.

The plan, although still described as in the conversation stage, is said to be well advanced. According to tentative proposals the five principal newsreels, Movietone, News of the Day, Paramount, Pathe and Universal would form a new company, lending executive personnel and technicians to compile a weekly international reel from their 10 semi-weekly domestic issues.

Distribution of the new reel would be divided among overseas exchanges with only one distributor handling the reel in each country. Approximately 14 nations in Europe, the Near East and Orient would receive the reel in place of the sporadic shipments of regular export reels now reaching them. Foreign language commentaries would be dubbed in the United States.

The plan, according to one source, is expected to solve many of the shipping difficulties now obstructing overseas distribution of all five newsreels. With only one release weekly it would be possible to secure air transportation and other shipping priority more easily, it was said.

Details of production, financing, the number of prints and what territories each distributor will handle are still to be worked out. Sweden, Finland, Turkey, and parts of the British Empire which now receive irregular shipments of the five reels are among countries which would receive the collaborative weekly issue.

Cammack in RKO Southwest Post

Ben Y. Cammack, who recently returned from South America, has taken over the post of Southwestern district manager for RKO with offices in Dallas, Tex. A native Texan, Mr. Cammack has been general manager for RKO in Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Starting his career as a poster clerk with General Film Company in 1916, Mr. Cammack has held executive positions with Universal, Warner Brothers Theatres and RKO Export Company.

Galanter Succeeds Rich

Ted Galanter, former advertising manager of Filmack Trailer Company in Chicago, has succeeded Gene Rich, as assistant to Bill Bishop, Chicago exploitation man for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. Rich, a lieutenant in the air corps, will be stationed at Spokane, Wash., in a public relations capacity.

Lexey Promoted

Jack Lexey, for many years manager of Warner Brothers' Broadway Theatre, in South Philadelphia, has been named district manager. He succeeds Lou Davidoff, recently promoted to the film buying department in the Philadelphia zone.

SOLDIERS PICK SIX FAVORITES

The following six motion pictures were most popular with soldiers during the month of March, as reflected by attendance at War Department Theatres: "Song of the Islands", "Captains of the Clouds", "Son of Fury", "Johnny Eager", "The Bugle Sounds" and "Ride 'Em Cowboy". This information is a recent service of the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service, operated by the Chief of The Special Services Branch.

Korda Buys UA Stock

Alexander Korda has acquired from the Prudential Assurance Company Ltd, of London, the one-half interest held by that company in Mr. Korda's block of United Artists' stock and the debentures held by Prudential in Alexander Korda Productions for approximately $1,400,000, the producer said Monday on his arrival in New York from London via Lisbon.

The securities acquired from Prudential, he said, represent that company's entire investment in his company. Mr. Korda's United Artists' stock represents one-fourth interest in that company. Prudential's interests in Mr. Korda's enterprises have been estimated as high as $12,000,000 at times.

Mr. Korda disclosed purchase of distribution rights for the western hemisphere to two British productions, "One of Our Aircraft Is Missing" and "In Which We Serve." It has not yet been decided whether United Artists will distribute them here, he said.

Mr. Korda said he would leave for Hollywood within two weeks to resume production. He plans to contribute two or three pictures to the United Artists' schedule for the new season, he said, and is considering Tolstoy's "War and Peace" as his first.

Mr. Korda said that British studios were attaining new heights of excellence despite wartime production obstacles.

Russian Film In Canada

A change in Canada's attitude towards Soviet Russia's films, which have been largely "taboo," was further indicated in the opening of "Inside Fighting Russia" at Shea's theatre in Toronto under the direct auspices of the Canadian Government. One newspaper there protested mildly that the short subject on the war in Russia could be classified as Communistic propaganda.

"White Gorilla" Scheduled

The script of "The White Gorilla" has been completed for immediate production at the Hal Roach studios in Hollywood. Peter Lorre has been suggested to lead a cast including Bela Lugosi.

Gullette Named Agent

George S. Gullette has been appointed general representative for Marsh Cinesound, Inc., which has studios at Cedarhurst and Oceanside, Long Island.

Wright to Try Schine Case for Government

The Government lawyer who will try the "field" anti-trust suit in Buffalo Federal Court against the Schine circuit, subsidiaries, Universal, United Artists, and Columbia, is Robert L. Wright, special assistant to the United States Attorney General, it was disclosed there last week. Mr. Wright, of Government counsel in the New York anti-trust case which produced the consent decree, replaces Seymour Simon, who reports to the Navy Monday.

Mr. Wright had been head of the special Department of Justice unit assigned to follow the operation of the decree; and it was over his signature that the report on its first year was issued some months ago. Mr. Simon introduced him to Federal Judge John Knight, in the Buffalo court last week.

The Schine trial begins May 19th.

The five companies in the decree this week retained Raulston Irvine, of Donovan, Newton, Leisure, and Lombard, New York law firm, to represent them at the trial.

Distributors To Be Called

Film deals the distributors made with the circuit are expected to be mentioned at the proceedings. It was recalled that at the anti-trust trial of the Crescent circuit, subsidiaries, and the "little three" last year in Nashville, executives of the majors were called for testimony. Decision in that case is still to come from Federal Judge Elmer Davies, who this week was still occupied with a full calendar. Four months have elapsed since final arguments.

Meanwhile, in New York Federal Court, hearings on the Government's petition to divorce theatres acquired by Fox and Paramount since the decree's signing, will occur May 19th, as the result of postponement two weeks ago. The Government asserts the theatres were acquired contrary to decree provisions.

Thurman Arnold, Assistant United States Attorney in charge of anti-trust prosecutions, last week opposed civil triple damage suits, thus:

"A triple damage suit simply means that the plaintiff gets the money, and then he becomes a member of the gang. I do not believe in private police, in anti-trust litigation. I have consistently protected business from triple damages."

Many triple damage suits have been filed by exhibitors against the majors.

Turner Promoted

John Turner has been appointed chief film buyer for Warner Brothers in the Philadelphia zone, according to an announcement by Ted Schlanger, zone manager. He succeeds Ed Hinchey, who is assuming other duties with the company. Mr. Turner's vacated position as assistant to the chief film buyer will be filled by Lou Davidoff.

PRC Sets Atlantis Deal

A deal by which Atlantis Picture Corporation will produce "The Army Takes Over" for Producers Releasing Corporation was revealed this week by Leon Fromkess, PRC president. PRC also has closed for "Corregidor," an original story, for a new season film, he said.

Duncan Succeeds Cooper

Eugene Duncan has been named manager of the Northwest Film Club in Seattle, succeeding Joe Cooper, whose resignation, because of ill health, was accepted by the club board recently.

Gower Gulch Boys Most Popular in Home Town

HOLLYWOOD—epitome of sophistication to millions in the hinterlands—is just another town in its motion picture tastes as far as western pictures go.

That community of ephemeral boundaries supports, of all things, two theatres showing outdoor action pictures exclusively, being perhaps the only locality in the United States of like size to do so.

It all started prior to January, 1941, when the owners of the ABC Corp., who prefer to remain anonymous, were doing so well with two newsreel theatres on Hollywood boulevard that they cast about for another theatrical enterprise.

So they made an investigation.

They found that 15,000,000 copies of western pulp paper magazines were sold monthly. That meant, on the basis of four readers per magazine, an estimated total of 60,000,000 readers.

They found that western rodeos were consistently drawing to capacity on their tours.

They heard of New Yorkers paying $4.40 in Madison Square Garden for live western attractions.

They discovered that the trend of "westernizing" fashions in clothes was growing.

And a survey showed that the persons interested in the West came from all walks of life—nurses, doctors, lawyers, judges, other professional men and women, as well as those in trades and crafts.

Applying their studies to the Hollywood scene, they found out that persons wishing to see western pictures had to watch their neighborhood theatre bills on Fridays and Saturdays, when exhibitors made up their programs with an eye toward catching the children's business.

The result was that one of the newsreel theatres, originally a garage, was converted into The Hitching Post, the first Hollywood theatre to show western pictures exclusively. That opened in January, 1941.

Staged Ballyhoo Opening

Irwin Parnes, publicity-advertising exploitation director for the company, staged a parade down Hollywood boulevard in which many cowboy stars participated. Searchlights lit the sky, floodlights lined the boulevard and thousands of residents turned out to see the celebration, jamming the street.

The Hitching Post seats only 300 persons.

Successful from the start, and with a constantly pounding exploitation campaign by Mr. Parnes, the small theatre was packed nightly. Adults predominated in its audiences.

For the first time, even Hollywood's "Gower Gulch" denizens, the high-heeled boot gentry who loll about Sunset Boulevard and Gower Street between calls for work in western pictures, had an opportunity to view the pictures they worked in without driving 40 or 50 miles Fridays and Saturdays.

One of the Parnes stunts was the placing of a sign, "Check Your Guns," at the boxoffice. Originally arranged as "atmosphere," the sign took on meaning.

Youngsters were bringing their cap pistols and shooting at the rustlers in unison with the screen heroes' blazing six guns.

The situation became serious when attendants discovered one boy with a BB gun, peppering the screen. A real scare came when, some time later, a .22 calibre automatic was taken from a juvenile customer.

The Hitching Post shows two western pictures, changing bills once a week, and a serial chapter on Saturdays. The prices—15 cents for children; 35 cents for adults.

The ABC Corp., its coffers again swelling, burgeoned. It took over the 500 seat Regal theatre, on Vermont Avenue, three miles away from the Hitching Post, and placed it on an all western program basis. Renaming it the Pony Express, the company opened it six weeks ago, with cowboy stars and western musicians giving a stage show.

In the "black" from the start, the Pony Express has become another successful project.

Boyd, Autry Favored

Most popular cowboy star, according to Mr. Parnes, is Bill Boyd, the "Hopalong Cassidy" of Harry Sherman's outdoor action pictures being released by Paramount. Gene Autry comes next.

Hollywood's cowboy picture fans prefer straight hard hitting, shooting, fighting action over the musical westerns. RKO's old series of George O'Brien vehicles get a big hand.

The audiences are critical, too. Most of them are regular customers at each change of the bill. They don't like recurrent cliches as "They went thataway" or "Let's go get 'em, boys" or "We'll head them off at the creek."

Action, and plenty of it, and scenery and the lure of something typically American—and which only America has—are the lodestones in Hollywood, just as in any other town or hamlet in the United States.

Flushed with success and proud of offering a formula of entertainment hitherto not attempted in Hollywood's theatre circles, the ABC Corp. decided to give their customers something more.

Will Open Museum

A museum containing props and mementos of every famous cowboy star and western picture will be installed shortly at The Hitching Post. It will be a repository, and the only one hereabouts, of the West as motion pictures see it. Negotiations are being carried on now with the various cowboy stars and western producers for the displays.

And something more—the owners of the corporation have further visions. They see in the future, and the not too distant future, a first run theatre, as de luxe in western fashion as any other first rate house, being built on Hollywood boulevard. It will have a large seating capacity, comparable to any other major cinema. The ushers will probably be garbed in jeans and chaps, and high heeled boots, with jingling spurs, and kerchiefs and sombreros.

How many tickets you-all want, pardner?

Unique Newsreel House Opens in Louisville

Opening of Scoop, the new newsreel theatre, last week, gives Louisville an enterprise that in a number of ways has few parallels—anywhere. The management has gone strong on innovations.

Scoop is the first theatre in the United States to be connected with a complete newsbroadcast station.

The theatre is the second largest in the world for the showing of newsreels. Only five other cities in the country have similar theatres.

Breaking entirely with tradition, the interior of the theatre is not completely dark during the showing of films. The screen and lighting are arranged so that one can read his program or look at his watch.

The seats are of the new kind which can be pushed back to let customers past the other patrons' knees.

A simple arrangement will make it possible to reach the spectators by telephone. When a call is received an usher will pass through the aisles carrying a lighted notice showing the name of the person who is wanted on the phone. Incidentally, the ushers will be girls, principally students.

The news-broadcast station is probably one of the most unexpected features of the theatre. It will be located in a studio next door, into which the public may look through large plate glass windows.

News bulletins will be posted on a bulletin board in the lobby of the theatre and whenever the news justifies, the broadcasts will be carried over loudspeakers inside the theatre.

Not only will patrons be kept abreast of the news as it breaks, but they will be able to see local events on the screen. The theatre will have its own cameraman who will follow the news in sports, disasters, politics and social events, using for the most part full-color film.

Short Subjects on Bill

Although newsreels will form a major portion of the programs (the best and unduplicated shots being taken from most of the major newsreels for presentation in one master newsreel), there will be other features, too. Each program, for example, will include at least one cartoon. There will be weekly commentary shorts by H. V. Kaltenborn and Tex McCreary.

There will also be other features such as foreign film and documentary pieces not available in other theatres. The first program will probably include "Churchill's Island," the first of "The World in Action" series. Admission will be 20 cents until 6 P. M. and 30 cents in the evening, with reduced rates for soldiers in uniform.

James W. Walsh, a Frenchman, aviator in the first World War, is operator of the new theatre. Now 45 years of age, he operated a circuit of nine French and Swiss newsreel theatres before coming to the United States in April, 1940. He joined a group which opened the City, in New York.

The Scoop was formerly the Drury Lane and prior to that it was the Walnut Theatre. It has been dark for some time.

BOSTON'S 14 TRUST ACTIONS MAY GO TO ARBITRATION

Exhibitors Compare Speed of AAA with Courts, But Cash Award Is Obstacle

by MIKE KAPLAN
in Boston

New England exhibitors are expecting a boom in the number of arbitration cases before the Boston tribunal as a result of the speed with which the Arbitration Association is disposing of complaints. Seven cases have been concluded and exhibitors are comparing this favorably with the more than a dozen trade practice trust suit actions which have been dragging along in Federal court since 1936.

Although most of the cases in the Federal court are complaints based on clearance, there are a few some run and it is expected that several of the complaining exhibitors will seek satisfaction before the AAA under the Consent Decree. Most, if not all, of the complaining exhibitors probably will leave their cases on file at the Federal court in the hope that the eventual settement will bring them cash as well as relief. Under the anti-trust laws, the complainants are entitled to three times the sustained damages and it is believed most of the exhibitors are awaiting such a settlement.

Oldest case awaiting settlement, of those filed within the past six years, is the $100,000 action in tort filed by the A & W Amusement Corporation of Providence, R. I., former operators of the Metropolitan Theatre in that city. The case names Paramount, MGM, Fox, Vitagraph, Vitaphone, First National, RKO, United Artists, Universal, Columbia, RKO Rhode Island Corporation, Paramount Theatres Corp., and Loew's, Inc., as the defendants in the suit.

The complainants charge that the defendants formed a conspiracy to control production and regulate and increase prices and that by January 1, 1930 they enjoyed a monopoly in the field.

Forced to Close

A&W claims they were unable to contract for pictures and were forced to use independent product. It is also alleged that the local branch manager for Fox agreed to sell the house for last-run if admission prices were raised. The compalint said that the Fox home office never approved of such a contract. The firm was forced to close the Metropolitan on November 6, 1935, because of the scarcity of product. The case finally was turned over to a master and is still pending.

Three cases, seeking damages totaling $300,000 were filed on September 8, 1936 and are still pending. All were based on clearance conditions. The Elite Amusement Enterprises, Inc., brought suit against Paramount, MGM, Fox, Vitagraph, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Columbia. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant firms refused to contract for pictures for the Rialto Theatre in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., except after long periods, generally six months. It was said that the house was forced into using vaudeville in an effort to maintain business.

CLEARANCE RULING SEEN PRECEDENT

The AAA appeal board's decision in establishing new clearance arrangements for the independently-owned Palm Theatre, neighborhood house in St. Louis, and two St. Louis Amusement Company theatres, will have a far-reaching effect, according to Ben Tepper, attorney for Victor Thein, owner of the Palm.

The board reversed the decision of Arbitrator J. Wesley McAfee and directed Paramount, 20th Century-Fox to grant the St. Louis Amusement Company-owned Aubert a maximum of three days' clearance over the Palm instead of seven, and liberalized clearance between the Palm and the Union, another Amusement Company-owned theatre in the same territory.

Mr. Tepper believes the board's ruling paves the way for independents to obtain definite availability dates for pictures instead of being forced to wait until the St. Louis Amusement Company has finished playing pictures at all its houses. He says he has been approached by two more independents to prepare cases for them on the same basis of the Thein case.

Another case was filed by Nashua Theatres, Inc., against Colonial Theatres Co., Nashua, N. H., Paramount, MGM, Fox, Vitaphone, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Columbia. The plaintiffs alleged that they operated the Colonial Theatres which was said to be a subsidiary of the Shea circuit. The complaints were the same as in the Elite case and the defendants filed a motion to dismiss the case for lack of jurisdiction. Federal Judge Sweeney allowed the motion on April 30, 1937, but a supplemental case was filed on February 1, 1939, which is still pending.

The third case was brought by the Standard Amusement Enterprises, Inc., operators of the Capitol in Elizabeth, N. J., from March 1935 to May 1936. The complaints were the same as in the other cases and the brief charged that the house finally was closed because of lack of product. The same firms were named as defendants in the case which is still pending.

Biggest cases still pending before the court are the Momand cases brought by A. B. Momand and Loretta L. Momand. The later case was filed first, on February 5, 1937, and named Paramount, Loew's, MGM, 20th Century-Fox, Vitagraph, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Columbia in an action of tort for $100,000. The Griffith Amusement Co., said to be a subsidiary of Universal, was named as intervenor in the action which alleged that pictures were not made available to the Odeon Theatre, Shawnee, Okla., until six months after release. A motion to dismiss was denied on April 23, 1937, and an appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals where the matter still rests.

Seeks $3,000,000

The suit brought by A. B. Momand was filed June 8, 1937, and seeks $3,000,000 as assignee of the claims and rights of action of the Home Amusement Co., Shawnee Theatre Co., Wewoka Theatre Co., Clinton Theatre Co., Inc., Holdenville Theatre Co., Inc., Hartshorne Theatre Co., Inc., Pawhuska Theatre Co., Inc., Alva Theatre Co., Inc., Momand Realty Corporation and Momand Theatres, Inc. The complaint, substantially the same as that filed by Loretta Momand, originally was filed in the District Court of Oklahoma on April 17, 1931. It was dismissed on July 9, 1936, but the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the district court order seven months later.

During the course of this legal battle, George Ryan, attorney for the plaintiff, introduced as evidence the court case brought by the U. S. Government against Paramount-Famous Lasky Corp., et al, in which the so-called "Standard Exhibition Contract" was adjudged in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The Momand case has been taken under advisement by Federal Judge Wyzanski who is considering a motion that the statute of limitations be applied in the case.

On January 13, 1939, Edmund G. Pollard, operator of the Opera House in Rumford, Me., brought a $100,000 suit against the Maine and New Hampshire Theatre Co., Paramount, United Artists, Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Vitagraph, RKO, Universal and Columbia.

Charged Circuit Control

Mr. Pollard alleged that the Maine, New Hampshire organization was controlled by Paramount and that the firm had two houses in Rumford, the Strand and the Arcadia. The former allegedly was operated at high prices while the latter was kept closed. The Arcadia later was opened and the defendant distributors allegedly refused to contract with Pollard for pictures for long periods, usually six months after the films were shown at the Maine, New Hampshire theatres.

In their answers, the theatre circuit admitted that Paramount Pictures, Inc., of New York, owned 50 per cent of the stock but did not control the firm. The defendants subsequently brought a motion for dismissal on the grounds that Mr. Pollard had failed to comply with the rules of civil procedure and had failed to prosecute the action. The case was dismissed when no one appeared to oppose on August 6, 1940.

Boston Trust Suits May Go to Arbitration

On January 8, 1940, seven cases were filed by the E. M. Loew chain of Boston, or subsidiaries. The complaints were mainly some run. The suits were brought by Loew's Drive-In Theatre, Inc., Providence, R. I., Governor Ritchie Theatre, Inc., Glen Burnie, Md., E. M. Loew's, Inc., Mt. Vernon Theatre Corporation, Alexandria, Va., Miami Drive-In Theatre, Inc., Lynn Open Air Theatre, Inc., and Winchester Theatre Co.

The first claim, brought by the Providence Open Air Theatre was against 20th Century-Fox, Loew's, Vitagraph and Paramount and sought $450,000 on a some run charge. The case is still pending but may be assigned for trial some time in April. The second case, brought by the Governor Ritchie Theatre was the same as the first except that damages of $225,000 were asked. The case brought by Loew's also named Paramount, Columbia, RKO, Universal and United Artists and named the Massachusetts Amusement Corporation, Massachusetts operating Co., and Middlesex Theatres, Inc., as co-defendants. The plaintiff claimed that his Winchester theatre was forced to wait 21 days after the Granada in Malden and 14 days after the Strand in Woburn and the Capitol in Arlington; plus $120,000 damages. The Middlesex Amusement Co. later was added as a defendant and the action against the Massachusetts operating Co., Inc., was dismissed. The action is still pending.

The fourth case pending, brought by the Mount Vernon Theatre Corp., named 20th Century-Fox, Loew's, Vitagraph and Paramount in a some run case seeking $150,000 damages.

The fifth case was brought by the Winchester Theatres Co., and is substantially the same as the complaint made by the Loew chain. The sixth case and seventh case were both some run complaints brought by the Miami and Lynn Drive-In Theatres of the Loew chain and both sought $450,000 damages. In the Miami case, 20th Century-Fox, Vitagraph and Paramount were named as defendants. In the Lynn case, Loew's was added to the list of defendants. Both cases are still pending.

Of these 15 cases filed since 1936, one was dismissed and the remainder are still pending.

Leon Fromkess Heads PRC Production

Leon Fromkess, vice-president of Producers Releasing Corporation, will be in charge of the company's production, with permanent headquarters on the coast, it was announced this week by O. Henry Briggs, president. George Batcheller, former production head, resigned.

Soviet Film Booking

The most extensive circuit bookings ever achieved by a Soviet-made short subject are currently being played off by "Defense of Moscow."

10,051 PASSES FOR ARMY IN CHICAGO

During the month of March, the Balaban and Katz Theatre Circuit issued 10,051 free passes through the Amusement and Recreation division of the Chicago Commission on National Defense, according to figures just released. This is against 4,320 in February; 3,846 in January and 2,384 in December. The Chicago Theatre, with a policy of single features and a stage show, was the most popular choice of the service men.

Eight Promoted by Loew's Theatres

Eight promotions and transfers in the personnel of Loew's out-of-town theatre circuit were announced last week by Joseph R. Vogel. Thomas J. Foley, Sr., formerly treasurer of the Orpheum Theatre in Boston, is now assistant manager of the State in the same city. He is succeeded by Dominic Del Torto, assisted by William Tibbetts.

Joel Margolis, student assistant, is now at the Century Theatre, Baltimore, in place of James Dixon, who becomes assistant at the Broad, Columbus. Russell Grant, student assistant at the Poli, Hartford, succeeds Margolis as assistant in Norfolk. RKO, Universal 20th-Fox Open New Product

New York premieres were held this week for four important releases, "The Tuttles of Tahiti," RKO's feature starring Charles Laughton, which opened at Loew's Criterion on Wednesday; "My Gal Sal," 20th Century-Fox film starring Rita Hayworth and Victor Mature, at the Roxy on Thursday; "Moontide," the RKO picture which introduces Jean Gabin, French film star, to American audiences, at the Rivoli on Wednesday night, and "The Great Man's Lady," with Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea and Brian Donlevy, at the Paramount, on Wednesday.

Last week's opening was "Saboteur," the Alfred Hitchcock-Frank Lloyd production for Universal, which bowed at RKO-Keith Theatre in Washington before a distinguished audience of Government officials, diplomats and military officers.

Jean Gabin arrived in New York on Monday from Hollywood to be on hand for the "Moontide" premiere Wedesday night, which was sponsored by the American Theatre Wing War Service. Following the opening, a benefit supper, with actor Gabin as guest of honor, was held at the "21" Club. Proceeds of both the premiere and the supper were donated to the Theatre Wing. Committee which was in charge of premiere plans included: Mrs. Gilbert Miller, Mrs. Chester LaRoche, Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs. Whitney Bourne, Mrs. Carroll Carstairs, Mrs. Julien Chaqueneau, Mrs. Averill Harriman, Mrs. Walter Hirshon, Mrs. Lawrence Lowman, Elsa Maxwell, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. William Rhinelander Stewart and Mrs. Paul Felix Warburg.

"Sal" at the Roxy

"My Gal Sal," which opened at the Roxy Thursday, had a special preview on Tuesday night at which 20th Century-Fox held a "blind date" party for 500 service men and 500 working girls invited through the New York Civilian Defense Recreation, Welfare and Hospitality Committee. Following the performance, the couples, as well as the Gae Foster girls of the theatre's stage company, danced in the rotunda of the Roxy. A. M. Botsford, director of advertising and publicity for Fox, has arranged an elaborate exploitation program for the film.

"Saboteur," the Universal film directed by Alfred Hitchcock and produced by Frank Lloyd, made its initial appearance in Washington last Wednesday before a gathering of Capital officialdom. Director Hitchcock was introduced to the assembly by Drew Pearson, who, with his column associate, Robert S. Allen, sponsored the premiere.

Among the notables present were: Postmaster General Frank C. Walker, Paul V. McNutt, Major Frank Capra, Thurman W. Arnold, Secretary Claude R. Wickard, Steve Early, and representatives from the War Department. Stars Robert Cummings and Priscilla Lane, who have stellar roles in the film, were on hand. Present also was Jack Skirball, associate producer. Universal executives who went to Washington for the opening were W. A. Scully, J. Cheever Cowdin, John J. O'Connor, Matthew Fox, former company vice-president, now on the War Production Board; F. J. A. McCarthy, Freddie Meyers and Jules Lapidus. Malcolm Kingsberg of RKO also attended.

"Yankee Doodle Dandy," the Warner Bros. musical based on the life of George M. Cohan, and starring James Cagney, will open at the Hollywood Theatre on Broadway, May 29th, following an invitation showing the previous night. Ben Kalmenson, general sales manager of the company, announced the date and theatre premiere of the James Cagney picture in New York last week. Price scale and policy for the run have not yet been determined, it was said. Exploitation and advertising and publicity plans for the feature currently are being prepared.

Edward Alperson and Harry Mandel of RKO addressed that company's managers' meeting in Chicago last Friday at the Bismarck Hotel. Purpose of the conference was discussion of publicity plans for "Fantasia" which opens in Chicago on May 2d at the United Artists Theatre.

MGM announced in New York this week that it would use up to five "Gone With the Wind" announcements on each radio station on 58 outlets in 38 cities on the opening day and the day following. Donahue and Coe, advertising agency, is handling the spot announcement placing.

Engineers Meet To Review Film Progress

The application of the motion picture to wartime needs for efficient training methods will be one of a number of important subjects discussed at the 51st semi-annual convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, opening Monday, May 5th, at the Hollywood-Roosevelt Hotel.

Advances in every field of motion picture technique will be reviewed as the 52 technical papers scheduled for the conclave are read and discussed by the several hundred engineering delegates from all parts of the country.

A feature new to SMPE conventions will be a symposium on the technique of motion picture production which, over four technical sessions, will trace the motion picture art through all its phases from the camera technique on the set to projection and sound reproduction in the theatre. An expert in each field will contribute to the symposium. The subjects to be covered include: cinematography, illumination, motion picture laboratory practices, production sound, scoring and prescoring, re-recording, cutting and editing, photographic embellishment, and projection.

De Mille to Speak

The convention will open at noon Monday with an informal get-together luncheon at which the principal speaker will be Cecil B. deMille, producer-director of Paramount Pictures. Emery Huse, SMPE president, will preside. Social highlight of the convention will be the banquet and dance, to be held Wednesday evening at the hotel.

The use of motion pictures in military training will be discussed in the Monday afternoon session, with officers of the U. S. Army Air Corps and the U. S. Navy taking part. Technical progress of the motion picture art in the Soviet Union will be reported as well. The symposium will get under way Monday evening, running through the Tuesday afternoon, Thursday afternoon and Thursday evening sessions.

The use of motion pictures in television is another subject due for discussion during the convention and will be amplified by a demonstration at the Paramount studios Wednesday afternoon. Three sessions will be given over to technical discussions on various phases of motion picture sound recording and reproducing.

Carrier Operation Authorized by ICC

Authority to operate between New Orleans and points in Louisiana and adjoining states has been recommended by Division Five of the Interstate Commerce Commission on application of Motion Picture Delivery, Inc., of New Orleans. The Railway Express Agency and other carriers protested the application.

The commission found the New Orleans distributing agency as "fit and willing" to perform the proposed services and pointed out that the applicant also proposed to "pay special attention to the forwarding of films from one exhibitor to another in the specified localities."

Public Wants Screen News With Its War Bulletins

Newspapers Holding Normal Ratio Between War and Hollywood News

When America reads its newspapers, it wants news about Hollywood, its personalities and productions, as well as the latest bulletins from the fighting fronts. At least, so the comparative division of space in the news columns of a majority of the papers in key exhibition centers indicates, according to Conrad Krebs, RKO Radio newspaper contact.

Mr. Krebs, field contact man between the RKO studio and news and motion picture editors, described how Hollywood news was more than holding its own in spite of decreasing newspaper sizes. He recently stopped off at the New York home office during his semi-annual swing through southern and eastern seaboard editorial rooms.

The total size of newspapers has been sharply curtailed in all sections of the country, Mr. Krebs reported. Editors, he said, faced with an all-time high in the amount of war and national news are trimming excess copy from their papers with sharp shears. Local news, syndicate material, and feature articles have all been cut drastically and in many instances local staffs and columns reduced or dropped.

Screen News Holding

News from Hollywood, and elsewhere, about motion picture stars, productions and other activities is more than holding its own, however, against the trend towards space cutting, he said. In some instances the total number of columns devoted to screen news has been actually increased on a monthly average. This is particularly true in cities which are enjoying defense work and construction booms, he said.

Both syndicate news from Hollywood's legion of correspondents and free exploitation material from the studios are holding their own in the face of the expanding columns of war news, Mr. Krebs indicated. Publicity and news stories originating from local showmen are also staying at a high level in cities he visited recently. Papers, he found, are particularly willing to lend news attention to any screen copy which ties in with front page headlines on the war or national armament work.

Activities of screen talent in behalf of defense bond campaigns, Army and Navy Relief, the USO, Red Cross and service camp entertainment also attract full coverage in local newspapers, the RKO publicity man reported. Papers in the vicinity of large army or navy bases regularly accord appearances by Hollywood screen stars full coverage, news and photographs, he said. The personal appearances at army camps of marquee names from the film capital is also aiding local theatre operators with increased publicity and news attention, he said.

No change in the trend towards smaller newspapers, amalgamation, and the elimination of many features and syndicate articles is seen by Mr. Krebs. Many papers, particularly in towns of medium size, have been hard hit by the reduction in national advertising budgets and the elimination of previously staple advertising revenue from sources such as the oil, automobile and tire industry. Department stores are also cutting their advertising budgets, it is reported. This has led to drastic paring of news space in many cases.

The fact that newspapers continue to devote important attention to Hollywood news is regarded as a very tangible proof, according to exploitation men, that the public seeks relaxation from the labor of defense war work and the worry of news headlines in motion pictures.

Hollywood Correspondents

Byline columns by Hollywood reporters are also maintaining their readership, Mr. Krebs reported. He said that he had found few daily papers without at least one daily "chatter" or news column from the coast. Many theatres are carrying several and at least one, the Washington Post, boasts that it covers the screen world through the pens of both Hedda Hooper and Louella Parsons.

One or the other of their columns is featured in a box on the front page of the Sunday edition. At latest report, Miss Hopper's bulletins held a margin of 12 to 9 over Miss Parson's in winning the front-page "play."

Discussing the type of exploitation material from the studios which editors favor Mr. Krebs said that the brief, and factual, story is most in demand. With space limited, he reported, there is no longer a demand for lengthy features and art on one subject. Film and makeup editors generally prefer to allot the available space to a greater variety of items.

Editors all ask that the studio handouts be kept shorter, Mr. Krebs said. He also reported requests for coverage on what film figures are doing in the war and defense program.

Mr. Krebs, following his New York visit, headed westward on a tour of publications in the midwest and southwest.

Set "Carnival in Rio"

Columbia's forthcoming Fred Astaire-Rita Hayworth musical, "Carnival in Rio," has been assigned to Producer Louis Edelman, who announced that the final script would call for seven Jerome Kern tunes with lyrics by Johnny Mercer. The numbers will be divided between the two stars and Xavier Cugat's orchestra. The picture will be directed by William Seiter.

Interstate Building in Houston

Interstate Theatres have contracted for a new $75,000 neighborhood theatre in Houston. The theatre will be the circuit's 15th house in Houston and will seat 1,000. An unusual feature will be a combination recreation room and dance floor.

Forscher Named Booker

Jack Forscher has been shifted from the contract department to booker at the Twentieth Century-Fox exchange in Philadelphia. He replaces John J. Bergin, who joined the Paramount exchange as salesman.

Spread of War Cut Number of Correspondents

Film news correspondents representing newspapers and news services in Germany, Italy and Japan have been dropped from its list of "accredited newspapermen" by the foreign department committee of the Association of Motion Picture Producers in Hollywood and the International Publicity Committee of the MPPDA in New York.

Among those enemy Axis correspondents who no longer have access to news sources in connection with Hollywood's film capital are the following:

Paul Scheffer, of the Berliner Tageblatt; Ernest Gunther, representing Der Film and Der Stern; Hans Sievenich, writing for the National Zeitung, and Heinrich von Eckhardt, Ullstein Press Service, all of Germany. Italian correspondents include: Renzo Oliveri, Cine Illustrato; Dr. Pio Sterbini, Cinema; Guido Errante, G'Ornale D'Italia, and Edmondo Laura-Legiardi, who represented a number of Italian papers. Japanese newspaper men dropped were: Yiuji Isobe, Asahi, Tokyo; Ito Schichisui, Asahi, Tokyo and Osaka; G. Y. Nishiyama, Asahi Cinema, Tokyo; C. Hagimari, Domei Tsushin Sha, the Japanese news agency; Y. F. Muraoka, Hochi Shimbun, Tokyo, and Fukuichi Fukumoto, Nichi Nichi, Tokyo.

The International Publicity Committee, through a New York spokesman, also reported that in the last two years agents of newspapers and news services of Nazi occupied countries of Europe have been dropped, although their correspondents in most cases were not Fascists, but rather "hard working newspapermen who suddenly found themselves out of jobs when Hitler took over." A list of these papers follows:

ABC Press Service, Avrobode, Provinciale Geldersche, Nyvegen en Nymeegsche Courant, all of Amsterdam; Le Matin and Chanteclair, both of Antwerp; Ordinea, Succes, Cinema, of Bucharest; Pest, Pester Lloyd, Delibah, Radio News, and Informacio Hirlaptudosito, of Budapest; International Press, Copenhagen; Prager Montagblatt, Ceske Slovo, Lidove Noviny, Kino Revue and Telegraf, of Czechoslovakia; Opera Mundi, Confidences, Pariser Tageszeitung, Le Peti Parisien, Cinematographie Francaise, Cinemonde, Le Journal, Leichtensteiner Volksblatt, L'Orchestra and Soir, of France; Berlingske Tidende and Nationaltidende of Denmark; Berliner Illustrierte, Kolnische Illustrierte and Munchener Illustrierte of Germany; De Weredkroniek, Syndications Press Service, and De Telegraaf of Holland, and Tonfilm-Theatre-Tanz of Vienna.

According to the foreign department committee of the AMPP, Hollywood's "army" of foreign correspondents, now numbering 64, have received from their publications a new high in calls for Hollywood news since the United States entered the war. In addition, the United Press has set up a special Hollywood service for Latin America with Neil Burkhardt in charge, responding to subscriber requests for more film news.

AMPP further reports that foreign correspondents now serving a total of 914 news outlets file approximately 50,000 words a week. Those countries which receive regular Hollywood news service include: England, Australia, New Zealand, Sweden, Switzerland, Canada, South Africa, India, Scotland, Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaraugua, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Colombia, Venezuela, Trinidad, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay and Panama.

Paramount Declares Dividend on Common

At a meeting of the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., Wednesday the common stock was placed on a regular dividend basis by the declaration of a regular quarterly dividend of 25c per share, payable July 1, 1942 to stockholders of record on June 15, 1942. The Board also declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 per share on the first preferred stock payable July 1 to stockholders of record on June 17, 1942.

Robert M. Weitman, managing director of the New York Paramount Theatre, received the Distinguished Service War Entertainment button awarded by the New York City Defense Recreation Committee Tuesday from Mayor F. H. LaGuardia. The ceremony took place in conjunction with the one millionth ticket presented by New York City theatre managers for the entertainment of men in the armed forces.

Kill Daylight Bill

New York State will not add another hour of daylight saving to the present hour under Federal wartime. Senator Coudert has withdrawn his daylight saving bill, in response to the declaration of Federal Transportation Coordinator Eastman that adoption of the bill would hamper shipments of war material.

Plan Employees' Features

General Motors, according to a report from Hollywood, is entering the feature film field with a series of 12 designed for free exhibition to its employees. The first will be written by Arch Oboler under a deal set by the Myron Selznick agency, it is reported.

Taylor Succeeds Buck in ASCAP "Revolution"

Deems Taylor succeeds Gene Buck as president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Mr. Taylor will serve without pay, it was said. The post formerly paid up to $50,000 yearly.

Mr. Buck had been president since 1923. Election of Mr. Taylor last week by the ASCAP directors was termed a surprise. Mr. Buck will remain in advisory capacity.

Mr. Taylor has been music consultant to the Columbia Broadcasting System since 1936. He is also a composer, and has written about music.

The election was reported the result of internal differences, beginning when the Society in December, 1940, presented radio with a revised contract asking more money, and thereby precipitated a one-year war.

Also elected, as part of the new administration, were the following: Gustave Schirmer, vice-president; Oscar Hammerstein, vice-president; George W. Meyer, secretary; Max Dreyfus, treasurer; J. J. Bergman, assistant secretary, and Irving Caesar. assistant treasurer.

The alleged copyright infringement case of ASCAP against E. M. Loew's, Hartford, was settled before trial in the U. S. District Court, New Haven, it was reported last week, at a figure in line with the consent decree provision of 15 cents per seat. The Pequot, New Haven case, in which Harry L. Lavietes, defendant, alleges that on the night of the claimed infringement of copyright he loaned the theatre to his son gratis, will be heard on May 5th at the Federal Court there.

SEC Reports Stock Changes

The Securities and Exchange Commission on Friday reported from its new offices in Philadelphia that Nathan J. Blumberg, Universal City, Cal., officer in Universal Corporation, disposed of 12,000 of that company's common voting trust certificates in December by gift and received 5,000 common voting trust certificate warrants as compensation. At the close of the year, Mr. Blumberg held no certificates, but reported 20,000 warrants.

The February summary of the commision, in which Mr. Blumberg's report was incorporated, also showed that the American Company, Jersey City, acquired 2,900 shares of Radio-Keith-Orpheum common stock in February, giving it a total of 290,130 shares, and that Atlas Corporation, Jersey City, acquired 400 shares of convertible preferred stock, for a total of 51,571 shares.

The only other film transactions reported for February were the purchase by Loew's, Inc., of 33 shares of Loew's Boston Theatre's common stock, of which it held 119,017 shares at the close of the month, and the sale by J. Robert Rubin, New York, officer, of 800 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock, leaving him with 13,615 shares.

Reports on the holdings of persons becoming officers or directors of corporations showed that DeWitt Millhauser, New York, held no Radio-Keith-Orpheum securities when he became a director of that company on February 3rd.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BARNACLE BILL: Wallace Beery, Marjorie Main, Virginia Weidler—Didn't think it was so hot myself, but patrons liked it and turned out to see it. Beery is great favorite with rural patrons here. Played April 10-11.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

BILLY THE KID: Robert Taylor, Brian Donlevy, Ian Hunter—Rather old, but still did above average business. The color photography is beautiful and Taylor makes a very good outlaw. Running time, 105 minutes. Played April 18-19.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town patronage.

FEMININE TOUCH, THE: Rosalind Russell, Don Ameche—I was afraid to run this but it seemed to give fair results. Played March 31-April 1.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

GREAT WALTZ, THE: Luise Rainer, Fernand Gravet, Miliza Korjus—Boy! What a picture. Excellent print and recording which we always get from MGM. Excellent business. Some patrons saw it four times before. Only trouble was getting them out after they'd seen it. With pictures like this, it's a real thrill running a theatre. Play it, even if you have before. It's tops. Played April 13-14.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

HONKY TONK: Clark Gable, Lana Turner—An excellent portrayal of the early west with superb performances by Clark Gable and Lana Turner. Packed full of dramatic action. Gable's captivating roguishness pleased them all. Running time, 105 minutes. Played March 14-15.—W. J. Overstreet, Prison Theatre, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

LOVE CRAZY: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Gail Patrick—Tops in this class. Best grosses of many weeks. Excellent production. Played March 26-28.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

RINGSIDE MAISIE: Ann Sothern, George Murphy—This is the first Maisie picture that I have run, and it was very well liked. Played March 17-18.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Jeanette MacDonald, Gene Raymond—Does not appeal to all classes and for that reason did not do too well at the B. O. At that it did a little better than I expected. The better class will attend and thank you for running it.—I. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

TARZAN'S SECRET TREASURE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—This picture was well received by all juveniles present, of which we had many, and such adults as care for the Tarzan pictures, of which we did not have very many. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 5-6.—A. E. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Red Skelton, Conrad Veidt, Ann Rutherford—They seem to like Skelton on the radio, and came out to see him. Business was above average, and the picture was well liked. Played March 10-11.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—Usual grosses from the so-called spectacular musicals. They just won't do outstanding business here. It's the same old story, but try and convince the salesmen. Played March 15-17.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

SIGN OF THE WOLF: Michael Whalen, Grace Bradley—Here is the old story of showmanship. It's salesmanship. Monogram produced a good piece of merchandise. We exploited it some and the box office kept ringing, thank God. Patrons well satisfied. Our only objection: it needed about eight minutes' additional footage. Played March 19-21.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BAHAMA PASSAGE: Madeleine Carroll, Stirling Hayden—Beautiful color. Picture good, but not as good as expected.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—Can't rate this much better than average. Business was not up to par. I think Paramount's best grossers are coming up, starting with their fifth block.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Carolyn Lee, Rochester—This, in my opinion, is the best Crosby film since "Rhythm on the Range." It did not break any records for us; in fact, it did below average at the box office. But it is a swell show, anyway. Running time, 95 minutes. Played 11-12.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town patronage.

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—Had a four-day snow storm during the run of this picture, and it hit a new low in gross receipts. It was a good show, but have seen Crosby in better films than this. Played March 27-29.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

HENRY ALDRICH FOR PRESIDENT: Jimmy Lydon, Charlie Smith—Henry Aldrich goes over very good. The radio puts him over. This picture brought in a lot of extra business. Played March 13-15.—Otto V. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

SKYLARK: Claudette Colbert, Ray Milland—This had no drawing power whatsoever and I didn't get film rental. Played March 20-22.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and smafll town patronage.

WIDE OPEN TOWN: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—Good western.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Producers Releasing

ARIZONA GANG BUSTERS: Tim McCoy—Tim still draws the western fans. Just robbers and cowboy G-men, but they really enjoyed it.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

SOUTH OF PANAMA: Roger Pryor, Virginia Vale—Enough action and comedy to hold up its end of a double bill. Pryor very good as usual.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Republic

APACHE KID, THE: Don "Red" Barry—Thin plot even for a western. But enough action to get by with our average crowd.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

COUNTRY FAIR: Eddie Foy, Jr., June Clyde—Using politics in a comedy as the main theme didn't help this very mediocre production. Lulubelle and Scotti are very popular here. This one will hurt their draw in any further pictures that they appear in.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

DOWN MEXICO WAY: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Fay McKenzie—Still a box office tonic, Gene Autry does well, but think he should have better stories.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

RED RIVER VALLEY: Roy Rogers—Average Rogers western. Business O. K.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

SAILORS ON LEAVE: William Lundigan, Shirley Ross—They laughed at this and that seems to show they liked it. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 13.—E. L. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE OZARKS: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Good picture and good business. Will please in any small town. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 12-13.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey. Okla. Small town patronage.

SIERRA SUE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—This one didn't stir up much excitement at the box office. Running time, 64 minutes. Played April 10-11.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

RKO Radio

CALL OUT THE MARINES: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe, Binnie Barnes—A very good action picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 17-18.—E. L. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

DEVIL AND MISS JONES, THE: Jean Arthur, Robert Cummings, Charles Coburn—A unique comedy angle with a human interest touch. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 21-22.—W. J. Overstreet, Prison Theatre, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

FATHER TAKES A WIFE: Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Swanson—Just fair entertainment. Too silly in spots. Gloria was at the top of the heap when I was a kid, but I don't think she showed her teeth so prominently then. This display rather hurt her appearance.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

PLAYMATES: Kay Kyser, John Barrymore, Lupe Velez, May Robson. We had more walk-outs than we have had in our whole existence and people of every age told me how much they disliked it all the time the day after we ran it. The idea back of the picture may have looked good on paper, but the whole thing fell very flat here. Usually college students like this kind of material, but this is one time they didn't. Smallest receipts for any show in eight months. A couple of fairly good musical numbers and a few laughs by Patsy Kelly are the best I can say for it. Hope you can do better. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 16.—W. Varick evils III, Alfred Co-op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BELLE STARR: Randolph Scott, Gene Tierney, Dana Andrews—Show well received. Very poor box office receipts, but then it still was a good show. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 12-13.—E. L. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

CONFIRM OR DENY: Don Ameche, Joan Bennett, Roddy McDowall—Very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

DRESSED TO KILL: Lloyd Nolan, Mary Beth Hughes—Good program picture. Nolan always well received here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GORILLA, THE: Ritz Brothers, Anita Louise, Patsy Kelly—Brought back this old one. It kept the audience howling with laughter all through. Running time, 66 minutes. Played March 19-21.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

HOW GREEN WAS MY VALLEY: Walter Pidgeon, Maureen O'Hara, Ronald Crisp, Roddy McDowall—No wonder this won the Academy Award this year. I agree with the choice perfectly and so do as many of my audience as I could speak to. Everything is perfection itself right down to the smallest part, and it holds interest from beginning to end without once seeming long. No words are too good for it. It brought out those folks who seldom come and, of course, you should connect up with the churches on it. Seeing it is a wonderful experience. Box-office was very good. I hated to send the copy back; wanted to keep it to run for myself some more. Running time, 118 minutes. Played April 17-18.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

LAST OF THE DUANES: George Montgomery, Lynne Roberts, Eve Arden—A good western, but no star value. Business fair.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MAN AT LARGE: Marjorie Weaver, George Reeves—A very good and timely offering in the lower group; used as a dual with "Sing for Your Supper." Business up to par and patrons more than pleased. Better than average B picture. Running time, 69 minutes. Played March 31.—A. E. Edwards, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa., General patronage.

MOON OVER HER SHOULDER: John Sutton, Lynn Bari—See review on "The Stork Pays Off," Columbia.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE: George Montgomery, Mary Howard—Regardless of the hokum these Zane Grey westerns always get them out. Running time, 56 minutes. Played April 10-11.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RISE AND SHINE: Jack Oakie, George Murphy, Linda Darnell—Very good, even if it did come at wrong time of year. Oakie excellent, but would have looked more the part if his waistline had been smaller!—Samuel Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

RISE AND SHINE: Jack Oakie, George Murphy, Linda Darnell—Business only fair on this feature.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, Glenn Miller and his orchestra, John Payne, Milton Berle—Sparkling entertainment. Justified itself at the box-office. Played March 22-24.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

WEEK-END IN HAVANA: Alice Faye, Carmen Miranda, John Payne, Cesar Romero—Beautiful color, but picture was not as good as other pictures of this type from Fox. Several people expressed the same opinion on way out.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

YANK IN THE R. A. F.: Tyrone Power, Betty Grable—This was played late, due to the fact the salesman forgot to sell it to me on his first trip in. It still proved to be box-office and business better than average. The title is misleading in a way, but not enough to offer criticism from patrons. Running time, 97 minutes. Played April 5-6.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

United Artists

MAJOR BARBARA: Wendy Hiller, Rex Harrison, Robert Morley—Here is a well done class picture that brought them out in big numbers in this town. The dialogue in this one is not too difficult to get and I was lucky in playing it early for this section of the country. If you have a class audience, this one ought to do well for you. George Bernard Shaw gives a six-minute talk at the beginning. Running time, 123 minutes. Played April 14.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

SHANGHAI GESTURE, THE: Gene Terney, Walter Huston, Victor Mature—Different opinions on this picture. No good for small towns.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Universal

APPOINTMENT FOR LOVE: Margaret Sullavan, Charles Boyer—A fairly good picture that failed to reach top grosses on preferred playing time, besides losing our Sunday matinee on account of snow storm that caused current interruption. However, nothing wrong with the quality of this production and entertainment value. It was just that we got a bad break at the start. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 29-30.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

FLYING CADETS: Edmund Lowe, William Gargan, Peggy Moran—Good program picture for double bill or Bargain Night only. Running time, 60 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

IT STARTED WITH EVE: Deanna Durbin, Charles Laughton—This is grand entertainment. All comments were enthusiastic. The gross was, however, very disappointing. Best picture this year from Universal.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

KEEP 'EM FLYING: Abbott and Costello—Best grosser so far this year. Played on a reasonable percentage basis. All the other exchanges ask a higher percentage. A few didn't care for it. The number of laughs indicated, however, that most everyone thought it was very much okay. Personally, I think it is the best so far from these boys. The laughs carry over so long that a lot of the dialogue was missed.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

MOB TOWN: Dick Foran, Anne Gwynne—Used on a double bill with "Stick to Your Guns," one of the "Hopalong Cassidy" series of westerns, it gave general satisfaction for action without comedy relief. Business was fair, due principally to the second feature. Running time, 61 minutes. Played April 3-4.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

SING ANOTHER CHORUS: Johnny Downs, Jane Frazee, Mischa Auer—Good program picture. If an exhibitor had no Bargain Night or showed no double features, I don't know what we would do with this. Running time, 60 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SOUTH OF TAHITI: Brian Donlevy, Broderick Crawford, Andy Devine—Very good program picture. —Sammie Jackson. Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT: Humphrey Bogart, Conrad Veidt—This boy Bogart is plenty good, and the fans go for him. This was a good picture with the Gestapo angle. Bogart has improved a lot in his last few pictures. Played April 10-12.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris—Did a big business the first night of Bank Night, then we had a snow storm the second night, and it was a washout. The picture is a good action picture and will get good results from the action fans. Played March 24-25.—Otto W Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

BLUES IN THE NIGHT: Priscilla Lane, Richard Whorf—The only good thing about this was the song "Blues in the Night." This was very weak. They hear the song in the previews, and think it is great, but what a disappointment when they see the show. Lots of kicks. Played April 7-8.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

BODY DISAPPEARS, THE: Jeffrey Lynn, Jane Wyman—Ran this with "Target for Tonight." "The Body Disappears" gave a lot of laughs, but they didn't care for "Target for Tonight." It was good. Played April 14-15.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

DANGEROUSLY THEY LIVE: John Garfield, Raymond Massey—Good action picture and good business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 14.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

INTERNATIONAL SQUADRON: Ronald Reagan, Olympe Bradna—Played mid-week at reduced admission to the best Wednesday-Thursday business so far in '42. Similar to "A Yank in the R. A. F.," and might have been an equally big draw if played on a Sunday change. One of Warners' 3 or 4 best shows up to now this season.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE, THE (Reissue): William Powell, Mary Astor—This reissue was dated and failed to draw average business. Wish I had passed it up. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 15-16.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MALTESE FALCON, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Mary Astor—Too much time spent in winding this one up. The unwinding was a distinct letdown. Business poor. Bogart and Miss Astor were good. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 8-9.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN: Fredric March, Martha Scott—I saved this for my Easter show and it was a fine choice for that date. Bought flat, so we made a neat profit. In fact, the best net profit so far for 1942. Monday and Tuesday business was almost up to Sunday gross. The better class praised it highly. A few of the "rough necks" went out holding their noses.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN: Fredric March, Martha Scott—This was a great picture and should be seen by all. I put on a big advertising campaign, but it failed to do business due to snow and bad roads. Played April 3-5.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

SANTA FE TRAIL: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland—A historical story with a keen interest motive and a fascinating plot. Running time, 110 minutes. Played March 28-29.—W. J. Overstreet, Prison Theatre, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

STRAWBERRY BLONDE, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—At last they put James Cagney in a picture that pleased all. This picture is one of the best, but business way low. Running time, 97 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1 (Reissue): Pat O'Brien, George Brent, Wayne Morris—This picture was one of the best drawers when new. Show it now and you won't get any kicks. Better than some of these new pictures. Running time, 98 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

TARGET FOR TONIGHT: Documentary—See review on "The Body Disappears," Warner Brothers-First National—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

YOU'RE IN THE ARMY NOW: Jimmy Durante, Jane Wyman—This brought in extra business, and did they laugh! Played April 17-19.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

LOVE AT FIRST FRIGHT: El Brendel—Very good comedy.—C. E. Fismar, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—Here is another side-splitting old comedy from these ace comedians. Every one of these reissues is great. The public seems to like the old-fashioned slapstick stuff as well as ever. Play all these you can get.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

PETE SMITH SPECIALTIES: This is our first Pete Smith and if his other shorts are as good, I'll play every one. Very interesting.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 9: "America's New Army" —This issue is just what the March of Time does so well. It shows the inside workings of our new Army set-up and concludes with a few words by MacArthur. This is well worth calling attention to before playdate. I play most of these subjects so new that I do not know what they are about before I receive them. Running time, 16 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

MAT MEN: Sportscopes—For wrestlers, "yes."—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

RODEO GOES TO TOWN: Sports Review—Interesting compilation of newsreel shots, well received and worthy of its rental and its time.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

TORRID TOREADOR, A: Terrytoons—A color cartoon with only a couple of laughs in it. Not too well liked compared with our general run of cartoons. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

WINGS OF DEFENSE: Adventures Newscameraman—Routine one-reeler dealing with airplane production. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

YARN ABOUT A YARN, A: Terrytoons—To what lengths these cartoonists go to "try" to make the customers laugh is a pity. It wasn't even funny.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

THIS IS BLITZ: World in Action—Everybody liked this one—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Serial

Columbia

IRON CLAW, THE: Charles Quigley, Walter Sande —The poorest serial we have ever played, but Chapter Eleven is coming up, and they still come to see it. So what?—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

THE WARTIME JOB

Arnold Stoltz is the 1941 Quigley Silver Grand Awards winner. He is manager of Warner's Avon Theatre, in Utica, New York. Mr. Stoltz has handled legitimate and vaudeville production and has written and directed radio programs, in addition to managing houses for various circuits across the country.

By ARNOLD STOLTZ

WHERE is the proper position for the theatre manager in the war effort? His long late hours of work often eliminate him from Home Guard, Air Raid Warden, and similar duties. He finds himself a knight without armor who must forge his own weapons. His efforts, however, will not be without recognition or medals, due to the Quigley Award for War Showmanship, which has been offered not to stimulate patriotism—that the theatreman has—but to encourage him to develop, express and pass along his ideas of action through the Managers' Round Table and thus to assist his fellow managers better to serve.

The theatreman has a herculean job in this war. His position and training make him a link in the war effort, a logical and local coordinator to hold together the services of the various organizations of his community.

TO clarify his position, let us take stock of Mr. Theatre Manager and see "what makes him run". He is a man who has merged his avocation with his vocation. His very swink becomes his sport, and his extra theatre efforts his relaxation. His trophy case holds signs of his interest—prize-winning campaign buttons and Quigley Awards displacing the usual golf cups and tennis medals. He has that priceless ingredient in his makeup—love of the theatre—without which he can never succeed or be content in his work, but with which, be he young or old, man or woman, just so long as he is monogamous, he will be ever alert to his environed opportunities to adapt all occurrences—local, civil or national—to his work. His love of the theatre makes him sensitive to trends.

He was the first to sense the depression, to realize people had time to kill—thus the double feature.

He knew first that a new busy world had started.

He felt the first ripple of the vortex of war and was set with product.

Chronologically, he knew when "All Quiet on the Western Front" would do business.

He knew when "Buck Privates" and its kindred humorous ilk would draw.

His compassion made the Greek War Relief and similar collections a success in Peace times.

He rang the first knell of reawakening patriotism by opening his show with the "Star Spangled Banner", using "God Bless America" as a chaser.

So, he was prepared when the public pulse started its tempo of seriousness ushered in by Pearl Harbor. He, then, is a Superman? No! He is an American!

TODAY the theatreman must use his intuition, combined with his training in salesmanship and showmanship, plus his flair for exploitation, not only to keep his theatre running as a place of entertainment for the war-sobered world but as a means of paying his debt to the America that gave him birth. His theatre must become the center of his local war effort. He must become a leader in his city's all-out war drive. It is not enough that his cashiers sell War Savings Stamps and Bonds—that his screen carries Government films. To this must be added his personal effort and ingenuity. The American theatreman will not fall down on this, his greatest job.

MR. THEATREMAN now has the chance to obtain his highest achievement, the finest opportunity to repay Uncle Sam for the privileges of the past and to insure those of the future. He will do it unselfishly and unstintingly, as one who knows how to do a full day's work.

His "V" for Victory will be to Vie for the Quigley Award for War Showmanship, not alone for the personal honor involved, but for the realization that through the clearing house of the Managers' Round Table everything he does for Victory will be multiplied by fellow workers. Such effort will bring its own reward, so truly expressed in the words of John Ruskin: "When men are rightly occupied, their amusement grows out of their work."

AMERICANISM SHOWS AID WAR EXPLOITATION EFFORT

Red Cross Stage Show

To help the local chapter of the American Red Cross go over the top in its national war drive, Ed Harris at the Fox Glendale, in Glendale, Calif., and incidentally head of the organization's publicity committee, arranged a special stage program which broke dailies with stories and art.

Recalling that Warners released a short some time back called "Flag of Humanity", the story of Clara Barton, founder, Harris built his show around this subject. First aid demonstration was presented with assistance of volunteers from the audience. Commander of the American Legion spoke on the importance of the Red Cross during the present emergency and introduced committee heads of various branches of the Red Cross activities. The organization's song, "Angels of Mercy", was delivered by localite; quartette from the American Legion sang old war songs, concluding with "God, Bless America".

Day before opening a special showing of "Flag of Humanity" was held exclusively for city officials, Red Cross workers and members of the Civilian Defense commission. Their subsequent sincere efforts to boost the show helped grosses considerably, says the Round Tabler.

With a Junior Red Cross unit functioning under the supervision of the adult officers, Harris staged a special matinee in tribute to that body, which put on a stage patriotic and first aid program, concluding with a one-act playlet on the life of Miss Barton. Junior volunteers collected quite a bit of money by soliciting pennies from all children attending the matinee. President of the P.-T. A. was hostess during the show, assisting and supervising the entire program.

Promotions on Pictures Tied-In to Defense and Patriotic Organizations

Some of the recent campaigns emanating from Round Tablers across the country and eligible for consideration in this department's new Quigley Award for War Showmanship include programs sponsored by and tied into local organizations.

Goodwill for his theatre was garnered by Joseph Bergen, manager of the Stanley Theatre, in Philadelphia, through his tieup with the local Keystone Automobile Club, which offered Defense Stamps to children who collected the most 1941 license tags, which the club turned over to the Salvation Army, to be converted into scrap for the war effort. Bergen offered the theatre for the presentation exercises, which were attended by Superintendent of Schools, head of the Salvation Army and manager of the Automobile Club.

With newspaper tear sheets to support his statement that approximately 600 kids attended his special Saturday morning matinee, admission, one defense stamp, Don H. Alldritt at the Fox Strand, in Salma, Kan., reports the stunt so successful that announcements were immediately made of two similar shows to be held at a later date. Full and half page ads were run in local dailies, cost of which together with the show was met by the Civilian Defense Council with the cooperation of the Salina merchants.

Corkery Collects Books

In Cambridge, Mass., Maurice M. Corkery at the M. & P. Central Square Theatre, has tied into the campaign to collect magazines and books for boys in the service by installing a special box in his lobby with appropriate one-sheet to aid the collection. The house program each week carries a special column called "Relax, America, and Attend Shows," etc., similar copy is used on trailers with each change of program. Recently when Erminie's Midgets stage revue played his theatre, Corkery invited the chairman of the Cambridge Committee for the Sale of Defense Bonds and Stamps to personally sell bonds to the members of the cast on stage. This was good for stories and art in the Boston papers.

Each Saturday matinee the Round Tabler presents a "Kiddie Kollege Kwiz Victory Contest" with a giveaway of 15 dollars in Defense Stamps to the 15 winners. The stage is decorated with American flags for the occasion, and the contest advertised heavily in programs, heralds and newspapers. Corkery, a veteran of the first World War, is also chairman of the Entertainment Committee for the U. S. Armed Forces in his area.

In connection with the recent Navy Relief Fund Drive, Don Norling, at the Shady Oak Theatre, in Clayton, Mo., decorated his lobby with various Navy and Coast Guard recruiting posters and "Give to the Navy Relief" cards. Entire staff was dressed in Sea Scout uniforms, each employee wearing a badge calling attention to the drive. Collections were taken in steel helmets borrowed from the Legion at every performance during the six days. Recording of "Remember Pearl Harbor" was played during the proceedings.

With the St. Louis Amusement Company in the throes of a "Keep Smiling" drive, Jack Rosenzweig, at the Manchester Theatre, distributes two different styles of program each week. One in red has on its front page copy reading: "Keep Smiling. Forget the News. Check your Blues. Join the United Smiles of America. Relax at the Movies." Faces convulsed with laughter green, shows Uncle Sam comfortably seated and relaxing at the movies, copy reads: "They Can't Lick a Nation That Will Keep Smiling. Join the United Smiles of America. Relax, and regain your smile at the Movies." Cooperating merchant's ad on back cover defrays cost of printing and distribution of the programs.

To cooperate with President Roosevelt's "Victory Book Day," held on April 17, Jack Matlack, exploiteer for the George Hunt Theatres, in Medford, Ore., forwards tear sheets of the institutional ad campaign run in dailies announcing special "Book Day" shows to be held at the circuit's three theatres, admission being one book. Cooperating papers came through with stories and art to give the drive impetus.

Girls Sell Stamps in Lobby

Prominent local debutantes sold Defense Stamps in the lobby of Shea's Great Lakes, Buffalo, as a highlight of Charles B. Taylor's campaign for "Gone with the Wind." Mayor Kelly bought the first batch, with resultant fine publicity breaks. A radio contest offered prizes to listeners able to compile the greatest list of words from letters in the title. Copies of the Photoplay Study Guide were sent to principals and history teachers of one hundred high and public schools. A complete tie-up was effected with a large five-and-dime store in which photos of Clark Gable were placed on counters and guest tickets offered for correct identification.

Contests Tied to Bonds

Leo Trainor, Rialto Theatre, Allentown, Pa., for "Kathleen" arranged contests involving U. S. Bonds and Stamps as prizes worked with the cooperation of the local papers. One asked readers to assemble letters from the title scattered through ads, to be accompanied by 50-words on "Why Everybody Should Buy Defense Bonds and Stamps." The other rewarded with a $25 Bond the carrier selling the most stamps during the week of the engagement.

Heralds, headed: "Look, kids! Your pal Shirley is Back," were distributed at schools in advance of playdate. Forty young girls took part in a bicycle parade to the theatre, each being awarded a guest ticket. Two thousand pennies were given away enclosed in envelopes carrying the copy: "This Envelope Contains Something of Value for You." The pennies were attached to cards urging recipients to use the coins toward paying their admission to the film. A radio contest, with Shirley Temple handkerchiefs as prizes, rounded out the campaign.

War Showmanship Award

Expressions of commendation anent the new Round Table Quigley Award for War Showmanship for 1942 continue. Made on the basis of endeavors in the war effort by theatremen, entries are acceptable on single promotions or complete campaigns.

DARRYL F. ZANUCK, Vice-President in Charge of Production, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, says: "I am heartily in accord with your Round Table editorial announcing the creation of the Quigley Award for War Showmanship. Martin Quigley has always been a leader in emphasizing the importance of showmanship in our industry, and this latest thought is evidence of his alertness to the need of our times.

"I am sure it will be an interesting and stimulating competition."

Y. FRANK FREEMAN, Vice-President, Paramount Pictures, Inc., observes: "I have read with a great deal of pleasure that another Award is being added to the annual Quigley Awards, and this will be for the showman who does the most outstanding job of presenting and furthering the causes of the nation in the war on the screen for 1942.

"The incentive behind this Award should spur all of us on in our efforts.

"In my opinion, no greater recognition can come from this industry of ours, to the one who receives the Award."

M. E. GILLETTE, Colonel, U. S. Signal Corps, says: "Personally, I believe that the successful use of films in National Defense is dependent on the wholehearted support of the exhibitor upon whom falls the task of presenting such films to the public."

23-Year-Old Reel Proves Boxoffice for Gooch

Recently happening onto a couple of reels which featured a Fourth of July Victory Parade in Houlton, Maine, Francis Gooch at the Houlton Theatre held a preview of the reels and invited a few persons that he felt sure would be in it and let word-of-mouth comment work for him. Waiting about two weeks more, Francis held another screening inviting folks who had been identified by guests attending the first showing and then advertised a special engagement of the film at his theatre.

To build the stunt, Francis advertised in the daily along the line, "How would you like to see yourself parading down Broadway 23 years ago?" and reports that apparently everyone in Houlton wanted to. To dress the show up a little, the Round Tabler booked in several old time reels and had trailers made up along the "Ladies, Please Remove Your Hats" line. So successful was the show, reports Gooch, that he has had numerous requests to show the reels again at a later date.

Free Dinners Promoted By deGraw for "Dinner"

Advertised via lobby display were the eight turkey dinners promoted from leading hotel for Harold de Graw's date on "The Man Who Came to Dinner" at Schine's Oneonta, Oneonta, N. Y. Through lucky number stunt, dinners were awarded, cooperating hotel advertising the tiein in newspapers and display card in lobby. Gas tube in theatre foyer labelled "laughing gas" carried card with copy: "If you want to laugh steadily for two hours, take this laughing gas and see" etc. Large co-op ad was promoted from leading restaurant, which featured cutout of Monty Wooley eating in addition to copy plugging the picture. Taxi company aided by use of car cards reading: "The Man Who Came to Dinner came in a Blank Cab".

"Mystery Girl" in Window Helps Exploit "Ball of Fire"

A highly-novel exploitation stunt featuring a "Mystery Girl" highlighted the campaign arranged by Nat Blank of the Orpheum, Terre Haute, Ind., for his engagement of "Ball of Fire."

Girl wearing a mask was engaged to sleep in the windows of Terre Haute's leading furniture store, from 1:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. the day following opening. Residents were asked to guess how many times the "Mystery Girl" would turn over in her sleep. The 20 who guessed closest received tickets to the theatre. One week preceding the window appearance, the furniture company displayed a 24-sheet cutout of Barbara Stanwyck in their window, together with a 40x60 easel, with stills. The merchant arranged for 5,000 heralds, advertising the stunt, which were distributed to theatre patrons.

Another phase of Blank's campaign included a tie-in with Liberty Magazine in which 3,800 coupon-numbered heralds were stuffed in magazines and distributed three days in advance. Persons holding heralds numbered to correspond with numbers posted in the theatre lobby received two complimentary tickets.

Republic Ready for "Spy Smasher" Serial

Republic Pictures and Fawcett Publications are cooperating in a promotional campaign to promote the latest 12-chapter serial, "Spy Smasher," based on the exploits of the hero of the popular comic book of the same name. Fawcett's participation in the campaign includes full page ads in all their comic books announcing the new serial, working through its distributors, house organ, bulletins, broadsides, etc. Republic is furnishing a special trailer, gratis, to all theatres playing the serial, to be attached to the regular "coming attractions" trailer, calling attention to the screen and comic book version.

Animal or Mouse Queries Conner

Directing his teaser campaign at the local University students, Marlowe Conner 10 days ahead of opening of "Male Animal" at the Warner Capitol, in Madison, Wis., sent bouquets to each sorority in town. Small white cards attached to each featured the pressbook cartoon of one of the ads showing a boy chasing a girl. Snap line read: "It's Spring and so I feel it." Card was signed by "The Male Animal." University papers devoted front page to story.

Thurber cartoon heralds headed "Are You Animal or Mouse?" were distributed, each carrying a list of 10 questions to be checked to determine if holder was one hundred per cent Male Animal. A jingle contest was landed in college paper, which required contestants to submit a four-line verse on their idea of a Male Animal. Cash and guest tickets were awarded in this connetcion. In addition, letters were mailed to over 500 professors calling attention to the fact that the picture was based on the life of a professor.

Waugh's "Animal" Score Cards

Down Memphisway, zone manager Howard Waugh came through with the distribution of Gin Rummy score pads printed in red with catch line across top "How to Keep the Male Animal at Home." At bottom, Waugh featured picture copy and cast.

Since Jack Carson, at the Warner Theatre, in Milwaukee, was a graduate of nearby St. Johns Military Academy, the theatreman wired head of the school inviting him and entire student body to attend the show. Accepting, the students marched to the theatre garbed in parade dress and led by 50 piece cadet band, which presented drill maneuvers in front of theatre and on stage. It is reported that a special detail of mounted and motorcycle police were called out to control the crowds.

Kin of Yancey Attends Rice's "Virginian" Opening

U. K. Rice, Carolina Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., for "The Vanishing Virginian," staged a "Local Girl Makes Good" radio salute the night before the premiere as one of the highlights of his campaign. The premiere was attended by a niece of Cap'n Bob Yancey, hero of the story, and members of Miss Grayson's family.

All local high schools and Salem College permitted announcements on their bulletin boards. A radio contest and a telephone campaign rounded out the campaign.

Fitzpatrick Ties Store To "Rio Rita" Teaser

Since the title "Rio Rita" has in it seven letters, Ed Fitzpatrick at Loew's, in Waterbury, Conn., had a set of cards made up, each containing one of the letters and cut of scene still. These were distributed by cooperating merchant to each customer making a purchase. Guest tickets were presented to those submitting complete set at boxoffice. Store featured two 30 by 40 posters in its windows and announced the stunt on its four-time weekly shopping broadcasts over local stations.

THEATRES TURN TO RADIO AS FREE SPACE DISAPPEARS

by BILL MORTON

Publicity Director, RKO Albee, Providence, R. I.

One of the most active Round Tablers, Mr. Morton, publicity director of the RKO Albee, in Providence, formerly in that post with Station WFCI, in nearby Pawtucket, has had experience in theatre and radio publicity. Mr. Morton opens a series of articles on radio tieups, which will be reported in these pages from other theatremen across the country.

Today there are a great number of Minute Man speakers on behalf of the Treasury Department. You might advise a station manager that your star would be willing to appear on his station as a Minute Man, speaking for the sale of Defense Stamps and Bonds.

If your star is a recording artist, you could arrange a 15-minute program with the station manager, in which the headliner's records are played and the listeners are asked to identify the tunes. The 10 best answers might be awarded a pair of passes to the theatre. Your attraction has been plugged again, and thoroughly, the only cost to you being the ink and paper to write the passes.

I can hear some skeptical reader saying, "Those three tie-ins are all well and good for a town where you're rubbing elbows with the station manager day in and day out, but come into my town and try it!" Well, I went into another state, into a town where I was unknown, and found the radio station willing to pull the last three stunts. The only thing we did was buy the records used on the 15-minute recorded program. Our budget would have been knocked for 40 dollars had we tried to buy a 15-minute spot.

Merchants' Cooperation Sought

Then, too, you, because you listen to the radio, know what businesses beside and opposite your theatre are regular radio advertisers. You might get together with them, for a pair of passes a week, and have them say, in their advertising, "Located opposite, or beside, the Blank theatre." We have a tie-up like this with one store that buys time on our four local stations at least twice a day—and we get a mention time.

We have found that business has picked up with our increased use of radio time. Radio does blanket a territory, and when we find person after person entering the theatre and not knowing where the different sections are, we feel that these are new patrons contacted by our new media. You know that the average person can read a newspaper thoroughly in an hour; he can take in your ad, along with the ads of every other theatre in town, at a glance. But people are listening to their radios all day; when they hear your plug they think of your theatre only . . . there's no competition. It depends entirely upon your own resources how many times a day the name of your theatre is brought to them.

Free space in newspapers seems to be going the way of all other luxuries. Papers which, previous to the war, were willing to give space for a contest or a splurge advance on a coming show, now are telling theatre managers that they have to cut down on space.

The theatre manager, however, is still spending as much money for ads in the paper, and he's still hesitant to take a fling at this new thing called radio, although he may or may not be conscious that radio stations are on the air at least 1 hours daily. They have not cut down; if anything, they aer now on the air more hours than before, and more people are listening to the radio during the day than ever before.

Many a manager has said that he would like to tie up with radio, but he has such a limited budget that he can buy very little time. Too many exhibitors continue to believe that the only thing they can get out of radio is what they pay for.

Most managers admit this, and are looking for a means of selling the station the idea that they should be given free time. As for approach, I might suggest that the exhibitor go to the radio station and make himself known to the station manager and program director. After all, these are the men who schedule the programs daily, and who are looking for variety in their bill of fare.

Then, a moment's reflection will bring to mind the fact that radio stars are seen on the screens of theatres all over the country, and heard on radio stations everywhere: Edgar Bergen, Charlie McCarthy, Fibber McGee and Mollie, Bob Hope, Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Patsy Kelly, Harriett Hilliard, Bob Burns, Jack Benny, The Great Gildersleeve, Fred Allen, John Barrymore, Orson Welles, Jean Hersholt, Kay Kyser. These are just a few. If you theatre hasp layed a picture in which any of these stars appeared, and you haven't received a plug on the air out of it, at no cost to you, you have certainly missed a bet.

Personal Appearances Tied-In

All that you have to do is get together with the station manager and tell him that one of these stars is coming to your theatre in a picture, and that you would like a tie-in announcement before or after his radio program—both spots if possible. He might ask what he is going to get in return for it. You can then inform him of the thousands of people who come through your lobby in the course of a week, and that a one-sheet card in your lobby, advising your patrons to listen to a certain program on his station, would be well read; and don't forget to make sure that he sees the picture as your guest!

With the war, the informal Man-on-the-Street program has gone by the board, and many stations were forced to cancel programs of this type originating in theatre lobbies, with the announcer giving a pair of passes to the person interviewed, and naming the theatre each time the award was made. Many theatres are still looking for programs to replace these spots.

Our theatre was one of those affected. We were advised on a Friday that our street program, "Hi Neighbor," would have to be canceled. However, our time was still available to us if we could put on a substitute program. The following Monday we were on the air from our lobby with a new program, called "At Hollywood and Vine"—15 minutes of Hollywood patter. A part of every program is a biography contest; the announcer gives a list of five names, a short biography of one individual named, and the radio audience is asked to write in a letter identifying the person described, with a pair of passes going to the 10 best letters. The program is heard thrice weekly, which gives us a total time of 45 minutes on one of the Providence stations. The novelty of the program is what interested the station manager. However, the exhibitor with the limited budget is still wondering how much it cost. Well, all we pay for these three 15-minute programs is a small line charge, so that the program can originate at the theatre. You can be sure that each program carries at least a couple of good plugs of the current and coming attraction, and the biography is usually of some star who will soon be seen at the theatre.

News Broadcast Suggested

Radio stations are looking for programs that they can get sponsored, and one that is proving popular is a five-minute news broadcast originating from the stage or box of a theatre, with the station bearing the charges. The station, of course, will give you a plug, and they mention where the program is originating. Stations seem to have no trouble getting a sponsor for this type of program, and they are not at all unhappy about having their call letters visible in well-attended spots.

A number of the major picture companies furnish theatres with 15-minute transcribed programs, which many a station is very pleased to have for a filler, if you will only take the bother to bring it to them. True, sometimes they might not want to give you these fifteen minutes without charge . . . then you might tell the station manager that you'd be happy to buy a spot at the end of the program. This might cost you in the neighborhood of fifteen dollars. Even so, it would be a good deal cheaper than paying for fifteen minutes!

There is a very easy way of planting copy for your pictures on the air. Check and see if your local station has a women's program. If so, go through your press book for any special matter you may have for women's angle copy, and give it to the woman who conducts the program. She'd be pleased to have a chance to talk about the stars—to tell what they're wearing, eating, doing—and it will give her program a lift that she'll appreciate.

BRIEF REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

For his showing of "Louisiana Purchase" at the Margie Grand, in Harlan, Ky., Leon Scott and Ken Carter sold the picture from the "Louisiana Lovelies" angle, each day for five days in advance of opening planting a free scene mat in papers showing one of the beautiful girls in the picture. Card over archway from lobby to foyer week ahead read: "Through these portals will pass the persons who will see the most beautiful girls in the world, etc."

To reach his rural trade ahead of "Birth of the Blues" at the Colonial, in Junction City, Kans., J. A. Sanders stapled a special handbill on the picture to his regular weekly programs and distributed these in a house to house canvass. Special front was built for the occasion with 25-foot banner with copy reading: "The first really great story of the people who gave America its music." This was followed by cast and in center was a hand painted circle of pictures of Bing Crosby and Mary Martin.

Selling his "Swamp Water" date at the Warner Sheboygan, Sheboygan, Wis., as a horror show, newspaper campaign starting five days ahead stressed the "Can you take it?" and "We dare you to see" angle. Special lobby display was made featuring grass mat which was covered with some large broken pieces of mirror and old logs with appropriate tiein copy.

With the Dearborn Theatre, in Chicago, undergoing a complete change in remodelling job and change of policy, John W. Shaffer gave his patrons a chance to say something in the matter through the distribution of voting ballots. Folks were invited to say whether they preferred single to double features and were asked for any suggestion they had to offer so far as policy was concerned.

Tinted teaser cards with catch line head, "Are You Suspicious" were distributed by Fred Tickell prior to his opening of "Suspicion" at the Orpheum, in Fort William, Ont. The head was followed by copy: "Of your wife, or your husband, or Friday the 13th?, etc. Well, do not be suspicious whether this is a good show or not, see," etc.

The old-reliable wallpaper herald was used for the first time at the Aubert, in St. Louis by Bob Johnson for his run on "Maltese Falcon," copy reading: "We are tearing the wallpaper off the walls to make room for the crowds to see," etc. In addition, Bob had an effective lobby animated display consisting of a 40 by 60 of the Falcon with the eyes cut out and flasher lights behind.

Herman Comer, manager of Warners' Capitol Theatre, Philadelphia, held a special screening in advance of "Joe Smith, American," for all executives at the defense plants in the Philadelphia area. During the run of the picture, Comer announced that all defense workers by the name of Joe Smith, upon proper identification, would be admitted free.

The Awards Rulings

The Quigley Awards are now voted for single ideas or promotions. Complete campaigns are not required for consideration.

The 1942 Quigley Awards are divided into four Quarter periods. Each Quarter is divided into two-week preliminary periods — the "Fortnights."

Entrants will forward their material for preliminary consideration in the Fortnight periods. Winners will be designated for Fortnight Appointments.

In addition to exploitation on pictures—feature, short, serial, etc.—entries may be on goodwill or other institutional ideas. Military service or other patriotic promotions are definitely eligible, as are stage shows, amateur presentations, etc.

A single idea may be confined to a window, contest, newspaper or program publicity, street stunt, lobby display, ad or ad series, newspaper section, radio tiein, etc.

A single promotion may include more than one slant, providing all slants relate to the original idea. Thus, a single contest promotion may be carried in newspapers, on the radio, in windows, ads, lobby, etc.

Where entrants choose to submit a complete campaign, the single idea or promotion for Awards consideration must be marked accordingly.

No fancy entries are necessary. Costly and time-using "Gingerbread" decorations are not encouraged. Showmanship only counts.

Evidence proving authenticity of each entry must be submitted, such as photos, tear sheets, programs, heralds, ads, letters, etc.

Reported as a first-timer for his local daily was the six day serialization planted by Les Preston for date on "Target for Tonight" at the Capitol, in St. Thomas, Ont. Officers from nearby bombing schools were guests of the management opening night and large display of Bomber Command books were featured by leading store. For "Sun Valley Serenade," Les staged a quiz contest at local dance hall with orchestra leader conducting it. Songs from the picture were played, passes going to those correctly guessing names and stating when and where the picture would open.

To plug his current attraction at the Lyric in Port Neches, Tex., W. S. Samuel got out a teaser program front cover of which was printed in red and carried the following copy: "Life is like a deck of cards. When you're in love, it's hearts. When you are engaged it's diamonds. When you are married it's clubs. When you're dead and buried, it's spades. But, to live longer, relax, enjoy life, and see," followed by picture copy on inside spread. In each case instead of the words, "hearts," "diamonds," etc., being spelled out, the symbol was used.

Banner heads on four pages were landed in local daily by Ernie Moule at the Capitol, in Brantford, Ont., featuring his spring fashion show at the theatre. Cooperating merchants came through with ads tied directly to his date on "Ball of Fire." Prominent were stories and art on the picture together with cast and playdates.

Highlight of George Cronin's "How Green Is My Valley" campaign at the Strand, in Portland, Maine, featured a lobby blowup of telegram sent to John Ford in Hollywood, congratulating him on his twenty-fifth anniversary in the industry and signed by members of the local American Legion Post. Opening was attended by Legionnaires and the Fife and Drum Corps which paraded to the theatre with tiein banners.

Through tieup with woman fashion expert on local daily, Bob Fulton, at the Des Moines, in Des Moines, Ia., ahead of "Woman of the Year" promoted four column half page of co-op ads, center of which featured cut of Tracy and Hepburn. Banner line across top read: "The Woman of the Year takes her tips from Sues," followed by the fashion editor's style suggestions.

Ahead of "Sergeant York" at the Capitol, in Sarnia, Ontario, Bill Burke secured permission from his local paper to borrow their front page when they were through with it. Making a mat of the page, Bill took out their headline and inserted his "York" title for an effective herald, and distributed them house-to-house. Local haberdasher came through with a "York-Stripe" tie which was plugged in ads and window displays ahead and during run of picture. While for "Corsican Brothers," Burke promoted a stunt in paper, whereby local twins were invited to see the film as guests of the management; in addition, paper ran art work on the stunt.

Election Campaign Parade Helps Sell "Citizen Kane"

Ten attractive St. Louis maids, pupils of a local dancing school, staged a vigorous election campaign paraded on behalf of "Citizen Kane," the day prior to its opening at the Fanchon-Marco Fox Theatre. Spanish type usherette garb, secured through a local costume house, made the parade more colorful. Inasmuch as St. Louis theatres customarily use boy ushers, the young ladies attracted even more widespread attention as they snaked their way through the heavy downtown St. Louis traffic, chanting "We Want Kane! We Want Kane! Yea!" The campaign at the Fox Theatre was directed by Les Kaufman, publicity chief for the Harry Arthur chain.

Kirby Switchboard Stunt Clicks for "Smilin' Through"

A tie-up with a leading local store, featuring a girl at a dummy switchboard and a public address system carrying her message to pedestrians, was one of the highlights of the "Smilin' Through" campaign put over by Sam Kirby, publicity manager for Malco Theatres, North Little Rock, Ark. A large overhead sign explained the girl was calling every woman in town about the picture. There were also plugs for the store.

As an added touch, Kirby had a roving photographer on the streets snapping pictures of women pedestrians. Pictures were displayed in the window for short periods, and women who located their own photos were awarded Defense Stamps.

Collins Ties Merchant To "Fire" Puzzle Contest

Ken Collins of the Indiana Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., tied in with jewelry store in his campaign on "Ball of Fire" for the distribution of 10,000 puzzle cards, which were given to patrons of the theatre a week preceding the "Ball of Fire" engagement. The contestants were asked to bring the answers to the store and those presenting the first 25 with correct answers were given tickets to the theatre. Jeweler gave over a full window to the contest.

Another phase of Collins' campaign consisted of an automobile summons, coupon-numbered. These were placed on the windshields of autos parked in the principal parking lots and downtown garages in return for passes. Okay record distributors placed displays in a number of music store windows.

Radio Coverage Aids "GWTW" for Dinerman

A radio contest asking listeners to submit 100-word essays on "Why I Want to See GWTW Again" drew tremendous response during the "Gone With the Wind" campaign for its third national release executed by E. V. Dinerman and Jim Pendergrast, Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati. The contest was conducted by a popular local woman announcer who plugged the film five times daily starting five days before playdate.

The GWTW photoplay study guide was planted in junior and senior high schools. Effective window displays were arranged with leading book stores, florists and gift shops. Drug stores featured GWTW sundaes, with film copy on back bars and menus.

FROM READERS

Every so often the subject of the "Pass Evil" rears its ugly head. But this time from the other side of the fence and from one of the boys in service, who prefers to remain anonymous, comes an expression. The letter which is revealing says in part:

"Although I am not a theatre manager, now or in the past, and am not supposed to pass judgment berating my superiors, I just can't sit back and see something I have been training myself for in the last fourteen years be taken advantage of. I am only a projectionist, so please forgive me for trying to break in on the manager's end of the business.

"Though I am a service man, I will wholeheartedly say that it is not fair just because a man is wearing a uniform, that he seek the right of a pass into any theatre, whether or not it is a 10-cent or a 75-cent house. I intend some day to own a theatre of my own and believe me when I say I shall be very close with the pass.

"The service man has at his disposal very nice theatres on the various Military Reservations. Of course, they are not lavishly furnished, nor do they have plush seats. Just an auditorium with wooden benches, a stage, screen and a booth. A huge sum, isn't it, to see anywhere from one to three short subjects and a feature picture? The show usually runs from 96 to 140 minutes, and the exhibitors allow us to acquire their vaudeville performers, who are appearing at their respective theatres on Saturday.

"Even the United States Army Motion Picture Service has a regulation on passes. It reads something like this: 'No passes will be issued, only for services rendered to the USAMPS Theatre. These passes will be shown on the Station Notification Report.'

"So I say, if a service man can't pay the price of admission to the civilian exhibitor's theatre, let him wait until the show comes to the War Department Theatre."

Students Sell Tickets For Kalberer's Show

To help keep the war-blues from his doors, A. J. Kalberer at Switow's Indiana, in Washington, Ind., tied in with his local high school in which their Band Boosters Club sponsored the sale of tickets outside the theatre territory for a special show, feature attraction being "It Started with Eve." Tickets were sold in school rooms and from house-to-house and on Main Street day before opening with a special parade and concert by the 80-piece band. Newspaper came through with stories and art, while the girls' chorus of 80 voices and members of the band appeared on stage at night shows without cost to the Round Tabler.

Jumping the gun a little on his Easter Party, "Kal" promoted the Rotary Club to hold their annual Easter party by inviting all children in the community to attend a special show at the theatre. Each child attending received a bag of candy, certain number of which held lucky numbers which entitled holders to extra prizes.

Ahead of "Johnny Eager," Kalberer distributed imprinted pay envelopes to factory workers and high school students, enclosed in which were jigsaw puzzles of scene stills.

Numerous Merchant Tieups Help Fine on "Ball of Fire"

Joe Fine of the Grand Theatre, Evansville, Indiana, tied in with a dairy, a jewelry store, chain drug and music stores in his campaign on "Ball of Fire." The dairy concern placed local advertising headed "Milk Gives You 'Ball of Fire' energy." Jewelry store ran 2-column x 11½-inch display ads on a "Ball of Fire" 21 puzzle and devoted a window to "Ball of Fire" displays, while the drug store featured sundaes, using window and back-bar streamers, window display with stills and menu stickers and music store spotted stills of Barbara Stanwyck in front of Gene Krupa's Band in its shops.

Other factors in the campaign by Fine consisted of a special teaser trailer, Royal Crown Cola bottle-top caps, juke boxes for theatre lobby, a 15-minute radio interview with Rivers, fashion stills in department store, radio tie-in on a grocery broadcast, tie-in with Art Jarrett's Orchestra for a stage presentation and a page in the radio magazine "Listen," which is distributed gratis each week in department stores and house-to-house. The Evansville Press gave two-column space to a double-talk slang telegram from Gary Cooper two days in advance of the playdate.

Brien Promotes Relics For "Died with Boots On"

Atmospheric lobby display was featured by Lige Brien at Warners' Belmar, in Pittsburgh, prior to and during run of "They Died With Their Boots On," the Round Tabler promoting loan of belts, wrist weavings, baskets showing tribal relations, deer horns, buck horns, etc. In addition, a rifle display was featured showing antique and modern guns with appropriate tie-in cards attached to each.

"Birth of the Blues" brought the promotion of four-by-five-inch stickers which were pasted on all available spots around town calling attention to the picture's opening. These were also used on juke boxes which each contained three numbers from the picture. Tie-up with five and dime store brought offer of guest tickets if weight cards showed photo of any of the stars appearing in the picture.

Essay Contest for Teachers Used By Feldman for "Remember"

Inspired by a scene from "Remember the Day," Dick Feldman, at the Paramount, in Syracuse, planted an essay contest in local daily which was open to all teachers on "Why I Remember ——— as My Outstanding Pupil." Essays had to concern a former pupil now prominent in Syracuse circles; first prize was a twenty-five dollar defense bond, second five dollars in stamps and next ten received guest tickets.

A continuity story with two-column lead was run in the Post-Standard, review featured in the Daily Orange, Syracuse University daily paper, and art and readers in Italian paper. Because Kate Smith had particularly recommended the picture, WFBL gave 10 gratis spot announcements mentioning playdates and also featured a special Kate Smith transcription with plugs at the end.

Dismissal of the action brought by David Stoneman, of Interstate Theatre Corporation, against Sam Dembow, Jr., Felix Kahn, Ralph Cohn, Sam Katz, Fred L. Metzler and Marion Coles, as director of Paramount-Publix Corporation, was sustained by the New York court of appeals this week.

Mr. Stoneman filed suit in 1936 claiming that the directors fraudulently issued a financial statement in that the statement did not contain any mention of some $30,000,000 of contingent liabilities by virtue of guarantees of leases.

The action resulted when Paramount turned back the Empire theatre, Portland, Me., during the company's reorganization. Mr. Stoneman sold the house to Publix Entreprises, Paramount-Publix subsidiary, in 1931.

Court Reserves Decision on Fox Appeal

The Third U. S. Circuit Court in Philadelphia reserved decision April 23rd on William Fox's appeal to change his plea of guilty to one of not guilty of conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the United States. Martin W. Littleton, attorney for the bankrupt former motion picture executive, told Circuit Judges Goodrich and Jones, and U. S. District Judge Paul Leahy, of Delaware, that the Government assured Mr. Fox he could change his plea if the other defendants were acquitted.

Mr. Fox pleaded guilty a year ago to the charges and was the Government star witness against retired U. S. Circuit Court Judge J. Warren Davis and Morgan S. Kaufman, his former attorney. After two juries disagreed in the conspiracy cases of Judge Davis and Mr. Kaufman, the indictments were nolle prossed, and last October, Mr. Fox appealed to Judge Guy K. Bard, in the U. S. District Court in Philadelphia, to change his plea.

This appeal was denied and Mr. Fox was sentenced to a year and a day in prison and fined $3,000. He has been at liberty in $5,000 bail, pending the outcome of his appeal to the Circuit Court.

"Mr. Fox," said Mr. Littleton, "was to be the Government's insurance policy in the success of the prosecution of the co-defendants. I assured Mr. Fox that if he would tell his story and plead guilty, he would fare no worse than the two others named in the indictment."

"The courts," Judge Goodrich replied, "do not have to carry out the promises of any of the prosecuting arms of the Government, for if they did, they would merely be rubber stamps."

Argument opposing the right to change the plea was made by U. S. Attorney Gerald A. Gleeson.

Home In Wyomin'

(Republic)

Gene Autry Western

Gene Autry, the exhibitors' dream come true, lends his ever welcome presence, together with Smiley Burnette, Fay McKenzie, Chick Chandler and Joseph Strauch, Jr., in "Home in Wyomin'," a western that has all the production values usually associated with this star's offerings, plus the added attraction of murder and its resultant query, "Who done it?"

The picture opens with Gene returning to his home town to save a rodeo organization run by James Seay, whose excesses are causing its downfall. On Gene's trail come Fay McKenzie, photographer, and Chick Chandler, reporter, to cover Gene's activities. The reporter is killed during a rodeo show, with circumstantial evidence pointing to Seay. Gene, feeling certain that the guilt is being placed on the wrong man, tracks down some gangsters, whose actions justify suspicion, but the guilty one, whose identity comes somewhat in the nature of a surprise, is finally apprehended.

Gene indulges in some very fancy riding and fighting and sings in his usual agreeable manner, "Any Bonds Today," the Irving Berlin song that has both melody and patriotic purpose; "Thinking Tonight of My Blue Eyes," "Tweedle O'Twill," "Twilight in Old Wyomin'" and the traditional and popular "Clementine." Smiley Burnette contributes comedy and a rendition of an amusing song, "Modern Design;" young Strauch, Jr., supplies youth, and Fay McKenzie, romance.

Harry Grey was the associate producer and William Morgan directed this latest Gene Autry horse opus that is well up to standard.

Previewed at the company projection room before a trade press audience.—Irene Smolen.

Those Kids from Town

(British National - Anglo American)

War Comedy with Domestic Drama

The theme of evacuation, that uprooting process which has torn the town child from the Metropolis, and thrust it down among the cowslips and cowhands, has so far not been exploited with any thoroughness. Here it is treated in a manner both comic and pathetic, with broad fiction and a slight humanity, plus not a little preaching. The result is a subject with plenty of British appeal, whether in the town whence the children have gone, or in the country where some of them still remain.

There is no attempt to solve problems with any profound searchings, despite the recurrent bootstrap lifting, and the passages which will be remembered are the more humorous ones. Children, whose adventures make up most of the film should enjoy it in particular.

The setting is an English country village, with a spurious and confused dialect, and characters nearer burlesque than real life. Here the kids are dumped for the duration, here the slum boys prove tough nuts to crack and organize rackets which parody the Dead End Kids' adventures, the girls prove too frail to contend with the tight-lipped cruelty of elderly maiden ladies, the Vicar muddles through the whole situation, and the Earl, in his mansion, presides with the genteel benignity of a Victorian hero. There are splashes of pathos in the little girls' yearning for home, and sheer slapstick when the boys stage a hold up in a sweetmeat shop, and a romping finale at the Earl's Christmas party with mediaeval armour and ancient firearms exploited to the full.

Many of the juvenile cast are "discoveries" and there is at least one Cockney boy whose self assured manner and throaty accents seem welded in the mould of a potential Rooney. Another child, a girl, essays some torch singing with success. Jeanne de Casalis is outstanding in the role of a somewhat confused but big hearted patrician, and the cast includes names known to the more zealous fans here, e.g., Henry Victor, Percy Marmont, Maire O'Neill and D. J. Williams.

Technical qualities are adequate to a subject matter modest but entertaining.

There was much hearty laughter—some of it abdominal—at the film's juvenile comedy. Miss de Casalis scoring highest marks with the Cockney boys a good second. There seemed agreement that an audience exists for a film of its type despite the absence of star names.—Aubrey Flanagan

Westward Ho

Western

Loaded with action this Mesquiteers western is probably as good as any the trio has made. Taking advantage of a story more ingenious and interesting than is usually the order of things in these outdoor dramas, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler, and Rufe Davis and a good supporting cast go to town a-shootin' and a-ridin' in a bang-up job. Steele and Tyler have matters under control at all times and they leave the impression they would be a couple of handy boys to have on your side.

The chief villain in this western is a woman, played by Evelyn Brent, who has appeared in more films than would be convenient to list here. She plays the role of a bank president, who also is the secret leader of a gang of bandits who rob banks in surrounding communities. When this lucrative enterprise is threatened, she counteracts with a cold-blooded scheme that calls for a deal of killing. The killers make their false step when they pick on "Lullaby" for one of their victims. The Mesquiteers, thus thrust into the midst of things, see it through and emerge on top.

Louis Gray was the asociate producer and the picture was directed by John English. The characters were created by William C. MacDonald.

Biographical Chronicle

Continuing his contributions to the screens' biographical archives, Herbert Wilcox, with the aid of Anna Neagle, here directs his attentions to the British woman flier Amy Johnson. Miss Johnson, an intrepid pioneer of transoceanic aviation, is remembered rather by the elders among us than by the youth of today, and despite the valour of her character and achievements it will take a great deal of salesmanship to kindle the smouldering embers of interest into box office fire. However, with Miss Neagle once again in the lead, the exhibitor has something to help him off the mark.

The film is biography rather than drama, a chronicle record of Amy's life and career, her schooldays—with Amy in pigtails and a gym skirt—her determination to fly, her trip to Australia, and the one to the Cape, her unsuccessful marriage with Jim Mollison, and her death while ferry piloting during the War.

There is little attempt on Wilcox's part to shape the material into dramatic form, and incident follows incident and flight follows flight. In her life with Mollison, who is painted as a playboy with more regard for liquor and ladies than for husbandly duties, there is, of course, pathos and drama, but it is all treated sketchily and without stress or accent. There is much library material of Amy's flights and the film does not wear an air of production extravagance.

Anna Neagle is sympathetic and sincere as the woman flier, though her semi-Yorkshire accent is, the realists know, neither Yorkshire nor Amy Johnson. Robert Newton's performance as Mollison is flawless in its creation of an elusive, impulsive playboy, with little attractive to commend him. The inference cast upon a living character propounds an odd problem for the showman. Edward Chapman, as Amy's father, tries hard to infuse the breath of Yorkshire life into all too scanty material, and Brefni O'Rourke calls for mention for his work.

Technically the film has nothing spectaular about it, but nothing, on the other hand, to suggest reproof.

A London trade show audience gave the film close attention but emotional climaxes seemed lacking. The patriotic note, struck now and again, provoked applause. Exhibitors among the audience, whilst conscious that Anna Neagle can be sold, were critical of the film's form and sketchiness.—A. F.

The Foreman Went to France

(Ealing Studios-United Artists)

War Drama

Though war is far too serious a business, when you are close to it, to be entertaining, here is a war subject which, while it is sound documentation and subtle propaganda, is grand and exciting entertainment in the soundest traditions of the motion picture. Additionally, though the treatment adds obvious fiction trimmings, the story is essentially a factual one. There was a Foreman, Melburne Johns, who went to France, and rescued valuable and secret machinery from the advancing Nazis. This stirring and moving film tells that story as excitingly and as vividly as the most rousing commercial thriller. It has hardly a moment that does not convince, scarcely a passage when excitement is not rife. It will make a name for director Charles Frend, who makes his directorial bow herewith, it will make money for the exhibitor and it will make frirends for Free France.

The story is the bare story of the Foreman's adventures getting across France with the machines, with an army lorry, a couple of Tommies and an American girl secretary. It is the story of France in defeat, and the journey an Odyssey punctuated with pitiful marches of refuges, pitiless dive bombings and machine gunnings by the Luftwaffe, with fifth column functionaries blazing villages and the vanguard of the Nazi Army all but ending the journey in disaster. Hardly an incident in it cannot be authenticated from contemporary records, yet it is excitement and thrill in succession. The French atmosphere is sympathetic and exact, with many of the Free French Forces and refugees playing brilliantly in the film against settings which will stir nostalgia in those who knew France and affection in those who did not.

TRAVELOGUE OF INDIA REISSUED BY HOFFBERG

Hoffberg Productions, Inc., are reissuing, under the title "Bride of Buddha", the Richard Halliburton travelogue of India released by RKO in 1933 as "India Speaks". The film has been re-edited and contains several new scenes. The review in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of May 13, 1933, said in part: "Sell it as a feature-length travelogue, telling much that is well known, some things not so well known about the tremendous land which is India, using the name of Richard Halliburton for what it would seem to be worth."

Clifford Evans as the Foreman is a dominating figure in the drama. Constance Cummings is both intelligent and charming. Tommy Trinder as the Cockney Tommy spatters an occasional but appropriate vein of British good cheer, and a hitherto unknown, Gordon Jackson, as his Scots buddy, makes a dramatic hit. Smaller roles, whether played by French artistes or English actors, are, with few exceptions, excellently held. There are some French children who will warm mary chilly hearts.

Technically the film is as near to flawless as makes no difference and Charles Frend's direction is exceptionally creditable and mature. It is a cutter's gem, and one up for editor Robert Hamer.

With its realist background, its alternation of drama and comedy, thrills and suspense, its humanity and its wide sympathy, the film should undoubtedly score a box office success on either side of the Atlantic.

The film obviously gripped the London press show critics as few of its kind have been known to do. Coming out of the bag, so to speak, it made a direct hit and was voted by many as probably the best war film so far from Britain.—A. F.

Maxwell Archer, Detective

(Monogram)

English Who-Done-It

Based on a novel by Hugh Clevely, with the screen play by Mr. Clevely and Katherine Strueby, and produced in England, "Maxwell Archer, Detective" is a murder-mystery tale that despite its English accent and locale, and limited budget expenditure, nevertheless sustains interest and has an agreeable rather than gruesome, quality about it.

The name in the cast of any familiarity to American audiences is John Loder, who plays the title role of the detective, "Maxwell Archer." Mr. Archer is supposed to be an amateur detective, but he accomplishes everything with professional finesse, and Mr. Loder portrays him in the traditional manner, which is to say, he is always one step ahead of Scotland Yard, he is always a gentleman, he is always clever, and never loses his dignity or his sense of humor.

The individual murdered is the leader of a spy ring. Besides being robbed of his life, he was also robbed of ten thousand pounds. A young RAF flyer, who had taken a suitcase from the murdered man's apartment in lieu of an unpaid debt, finds himself under suspicion, and enlists Archer's aid. Archer secures the suitcase and finds the missing money hidden inside the lining. The flyer is arrested, and his girl friend, only too anxious to help, attaches herself to Archer. Ultimately, the stolen money comes into her hands, she causes a number of complications, but Archer solves it all. The stolen money is contributed to an orphanage fund, and the flyer and the girl are reunited, but she apparently still wants to be Archer's secretary.

William Sistrom produced and John Paddy Carstairs directed "Maxwell Archer, Detective," which should prove satisfactory both as a program and as a "who-done-it" picture.

Reviewed at the New York Theatre, in New York, where the audience seemed to appreciate the bits of humor scattered throughout the picture.—I. S.

Saboteur

Number One Hitchcock

The drama of a nation stirred to action, of a people's growing realization of themselves and their responsibilities, has been transmitted to the screen in all its vividness in Alfred Hitchcock's "Saboteur." The vehicle is action, full-bodied and thrilling, the characters are recognizable Americans and the result is sheer entertainment for most of its 98 minutes.

Following the tried Hitchcock formula, with which showmen are fortunately familiar, this is a story of a chase, but the focus of the action is not on the elusive enemy—the saboteurs of the title—but on their dogged pursuit by a man unjustly accused. It spreads from the initial explosion in a California airplane factory to final vindication atop the Statue of Liberty.

Robert Cummings, the man, is himself pursued by the wrath of an indignant America, but helped, too, by the intuitive judgment and sympathy of simple people. He seeks refuge with a blind man who senses his innocence, and finds sanctuary with a troupe of circus freaks who recognize his sincerity and the frightened loyalty of the girl with him who finally believes in him too. The climax, at the launching of a new warship, when the smoke of a delayed explosion clears and the ship slides down the ways unharmed, left a rapt audience smiling mistily. It's that kind of a picture.

Performances are good, some so good—Norman Lloyd's as the chief saboteur, Otto Kruger's, and Murray Alper's—that they scarcely seem to be acting. Robert Cummings, with the responsibility of representing Young America, does well, if a little stolidly. Priscilla Lane gives a moving portrayal.

Exhibitors have a wide scope for the bestowal of lavish credit. Director Alfred Hitchcock has done his usual meticulous job on a broader canvas and with more sweep and vitality than he has shown in an impressive line of precedents. The production crew, under Jack H. Skirball, has cooperated to produce almost perfect timing and rare beauty. Joseph Valentine's photography is excellent. The art and sound direction by Jack Otterson and Bernard B. Brown have been done with skill and assurance, and the original story, collaborated in by Peter Vertel, Joan Harrison and Dorothy Parker, furnishes a well-paced, exciting backbone for magnificent entertainment.

A crowded projection room audience of amateur and professional critics expressed uniform enthusiasm.—E. A. CUNNINGHAM.

MARKET NOTES

¶ News Reports concerning equipment and materials, and those who make them

Fluorescent Fixtures Barred

PRODUCTION of fluorescent lighting fixtures using steel, copper, mercury, aluminum, cadmium and bakelite has been prohibited by the War Production Board. The order specifies that the making of such lighting equipment is not permitted except for delivery on purchases enjoying a priority rating of at least A-2.. The sale or delivery of repair parts for such fixtures is also banned, with the entire restriction calculated to save materials which have been going into the manufacture of fluorescent appliances. The order was dated to go into effect 61 days after April 2.

Delivery Date Required

EVERY applicant for priority assistance must specify in his application the latest date on which the items sought for purchase can be delivered. The announcement by the War Production Board states that applicants using the PD-1A forms have been asking for immediate delivery instead of filling in a definite delivery date, and hereafter no such application will be considered until a certain delivery date is given.

Another recent order of the WPB restricts further the production of electrical appliances. An amendment to the original regulation reduces the production permitted to 20% of the factory sales value in 1941. The effect of the order excludes, however, applications bearing a priority rating of A-10 or higher.

Luminous Plastic Signs

SIGNS MADE of Formica with the legend printed in fluorescent or phosphorescent chemicals have been developed by the Formica Insulation Company of Cincinnati. The fluorescent type is actuated by "black light"; the phosphorescent kind glows for approximately two hours after being subjected to ordinary light. The plates may be printed in various colors, while the lettering is protected by a plastic film. An order for more than a couple of signs is required.

Light Projection Equipment

A STEREOPTICON and a spotlight of new design have been brought out by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. The steropticon takes up to 1,000-watt lamps; the spotlight uses the Par-38 or Par-40 spotlight lamps.

The stereopticon, which accommodates standard slides, has a motor driven forced-air cooling device, high-speed motor, oilite bearings, and built-in tilting device in rubber-padded base for easy adjustment to image height requirements.

Other features are a pre-focus socket aligning filament on optical axis, all-steel bellows that is fully adjustable, provision for adjusting objective lens and locking it in any position, and push-pull adjustment for lamp socket to accommodate beam spread to various lenses.

The equipment has a wire heat guard for protection of the operator, and the roof of the housing is hinged for easy lamping. The slide carrier is of steel. Control handles are of bakelite. Housing finish is baked black wrinkle enamel. Overall length is 30 inches.

Left, the new Golde color wheel spotlight; and, above, the stereopticon just developed by the same manufacturer.

The spotlight is capable of projecting six color changes a minute. The gelatine colors are mounted in a metal wheel driven by a slow-speed synchronous motor with gear drive. The gears, which are totally enclosed, run in an oil bath. The wheel is attached to the motor, which operates in any position, with bakelite thumbscrews and is readily detachable.

New Small Projectors

TWO NEW MODELS of portable sound projectors, one a 16-mm., the other a 35-mm., have been brought out by the DeVry Corporation, Chicago. Both are called "Victory" models, referring to the elimination of materials which are restricted from parts of the design.

The company also announces the appointment of Norman D. Olsen as export manager. Mr. Olsen formerly handled DeVry distributor-dealer relations.

Corner-Turning Curtain Track

CURTAIN TRACK equipment permitting the turning of a curtain around a square corner has been marketed by Vallen, Inc., Akron, Ohio. Designed especially to meet problems presented by certain cyclorama requirements, the track can be installed so that the curtain may be carried completely around an approximately square area; accordingly, the curtain could carry a different scenic background on each side.

All-Steel Coils Available

STEEL COILS for heat transfer in cooling or heating applications have been adopted by McQuay, Inc., Minneapolis, as substitutes for copper or other non-ferrous coils. The company announces it is accepting orders for the steel coils provided there is a priority rating of A-10 or better.

THE MOVIES ...and War

TODAY, the motion picture industry faces new obligations. It must provide relaxation for soldiers, sailors, and war workers; create understanding of America's war problems; and help educate America and Americans as to what they must do to win the war.

The theatre industry is fulfilling these increased obligations with vision and a spirit of patriotism that is a credit to show business.

Long ago, the British proclaimed the movies necessary to steady the nerves of a nation at war. Uncle Sam, likewise, is acutely aware of the important part entertainment and education play in our all-out victory drive.

It is the job of the American Seating Company to provide comfortable, durable seating for theatres, that this essential service to America's armed forces and war workers may continue.

While the use of our facilities for production of direct military needs increases daily, we will continue as long as possible to serve the theatre industry —as we have done for more than 50 years.

Dealers Share Theatres' Wartime Supply Problem

THAT INCREASINGLY knotty problem of how best to serve theatres under wartime regulations was taken up with concentrated head-scratchings at the meeting held by the Theatre Equipment Dealers Protective Association at the Stevens hotel, Chicago, the last week in April. In calling the meeting, Ray G. Colvin, executive secretary of the organization, invited manufacturers of equipment and supplies to tell their side of the story to the dealers, and at one session manufacturers and dealers expressed their troubled viewpoints together.

"Hoarding" came in for vigorous condemnation during the three-day meeting. Ways and means to discourage this practice was discussed. Inasmuch as most manufacturers of theatre equipment are on an 85 to 93% war basis, the dealers voiced a desire to co-operate with the War Production Board in banning production of equipment and accessories that are not required for immediate replacement. They recommended that where priority materials were involved manufacturers substitute a "Victory" line of equipment.

At one session Lee R. McCullough of the Chicago WPB office, discussed the reasons for priorities. He surprised many of those present with information about a form known as PD-1X, which covers the replenishing of stocks for distributors.

"Priority ratings and orders are still in use," Mr. McCullough said, "and they will continue to be used. The general pattern has been modified rather than fundamentally changed, but the emphasis and the results are very different from what they were six months ago. Instead of being satisfied to give preference to military orders with a minimum dislocation of the civilian economy, the objective now is to devote every possible machine and every ounce of materials to winning the war.

"In the earlier days of the priorities system, preference ratings were assigned to various industries and products, in accordance with their importance, by general preference orders which permitted almost unlimited, use by a whole industry of the rating assigned to it.

THE NEW "REQUIREMENTS" PLAN

"Under the new Production Requirements Plan, priority ratings are still used, but they are assigned in each case only to a specified quantity of materials.

"We are now in the position of doling out scarce materials and products very carefully so that the maximum amount will be devoted to the war effort. In order to assign preference ratings fairly and efficiently, the War Production Board has to know not only exactly what the materials are to be used for, and what place the end products have in the wartime economy, but also how much material a manufacturer has on hand, what orders he has on his books, and the way he uses materials."

"For cases in which a specific quantity of materials or a tool or a certain product like an electric motor is needed, an individual application for priority assistance has been provided. This application form is known as PD-1A, and the rating assigned on the PD-1A certificate is good for just one usage. To make this individual rating more workable, the rating has recently been made extendable—that is, a supplier served with a purchase order bearing a preference rating issued on a PD-1A certificate who needs materials to fill the order can extend the rating to his supplier. When necessary it may be re-extended, as long as it is used only for materials which will be ultimately delivered to the original applicant in accordance with the certificate.

PURPOSE OF A-10 RATING

"Another general or blanket order—P-100—assigns an A-10 preference rating which may be used by any producer or wholesaler and by any one of a considerable number of industries specified in the order to obtain maintenance, repair and operating supplies. This order has proved very helpful for keeping existing facilities in operation, but it will become less important as industries shift over to the Production Requirements Plan. No producer operating under PRP is entitled to use a rating assigned by any other order or certificate, except as may be allowed in a few very special cases."

Harry Strong of the Strong Electric Company, warned against the storing away of an extra reflector for a year or more; the silver on the reflector might become milky. He also urged that the dealers discourage the sale of extra reflectors. Mr. Strong exhibited one of his new "Victory" lamphouses.

Fred Matthews of Motiograph, Inc., said there were enough materials on hand for all needed replacement parts—for awhile. Similarly, George Smiley of the Continental Electric Company, told the dealers that unless there would be unusual demands by the Government, there was no prospect of a shortage of photocells.

Among manufacturers present were Clarence Ashcraft, C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company, Long Island City, N. Y.; J. C. Ray G. Colvin was re-elected executive secretary of the association.

Four new applications were received and approved for membership. These were the Don Ruliffson Company, Minneapolis; Abbott Theatre Equipment Company, Chicago; Howell Equipment Company, Atlanta; and the Steinberg Equipment Company, Pittsburgh.

REDUCING INJURY AND FIRE

One of the chief causes of injury from bombings is flying fragments of glass; what theatre managements can do to minimize the danger is detailed in the article beginning on this page

1. Precautions Against Injuries from Glass

By JOHN J. SEFING

NOW THAT planes of the United Nations have bombed cities of Japan, all of us are doubtless more inclined to turn an attentive ear to urgings that blackout and air raid precatuions be taken. It behooves the theatre business to do everything feasible to encourage confidence among theatregoers that theatres are always among the less hazardous places in wartime. To do this, and to make the claim stick should an air raid actually occur, theatre managements should put safety measures into effect at once, wherever this has not already been done.

BETTER THEATRES was the first publication to deal with theatre air raid precautions in any comprehensive manner; in the issue of last December these columns offered suggestions that had been developed with the aid of New York authorities, and in turn this material was substantially used later in a pamphlet issued by the New York fire department. Here we deal with a certain phase of such precautions, measures that minimize the hazard of glass.

Practical Measures for the Protection of Patrons During Blackouts and Air Raids

THE old saying goes, "An ounce of caution is worth a pound of cure." In applying it to the civilian dangers of modern war there is little to be offered by way of reservations. We may prefer to gamble on the chances of having our property destroyed during an air raid, but we cannot do so with respect to human lives. And the motion picture theatre business has some very special responsibilities in the protection of its patrons.

All exhibitors in the nation want to do whatever is necessary to meet that responsibility in wartime as in peacetime; but, while normal hazards are pretty much the same throughout the country, those of wartime may be reasonably regarded as highly variable. It is certainly advisable for theatres in coastal areas to go to the limit of precautionary measures. But to do this entails a substantial outlay of cash and a good deal of extra time and labor. There are, moreover, thousands of theatres, too many for all to be supplied very soon with much of the equipment prescribed for "all-out" protection. The question therefore arises: To what extent should a theatre deeply inland prepare for an air raid?

The best recommendations—best because most practical, and most practical because most specific—have come from the trade press and the exhibitors' own organizations, or theatre groups cooperating with local O.C.D. people. Just what the management of a certain theatre or group of theatres in a specific locality really should do to be reasonably safe lies largely with the judgment of each management, guided by local civilian defense authorities. What to do can best be decided in that manner. Since last fall it has been, and it will continue to be, the purpose of Better Theatres to offer reliable counsel as to how to effect the various precautions—methods from which each management can select measures according to its own needs.

As for the administration of blackout and air raid measures, organization within each theatre will ordinarily be far simpler than that indicated by some of the O.C.D. recommendations. The manager is, of course, the most logical person to perform as "warden". There should be at least two other persons on the staff or instantly available to deal with incendiary bombs and fires caused by them. Personnel requirements from that point on cannot be subjected to general rules; the size and location of the theatre will determine these.

Pretty much the same essentials and latitudes apply to the purchase of equipment. We doubt that a theatre in the Ozark mountains will need a stirrup pump. Similarly, a great deal of the recommendations variously issued for lighting extensions, manual controls, etc., are of substantial significance (at least so far) to theatres in coastal areas. In short, to expect more than is specifically necessary for reasonable protection of patrons is to encourage negligence, unless an unwarranted burden is to be imposed on many theatres.

It has been shown from reports of casualties in bombed cities that the majority of injuries were caused by splinters of shattered glass. Fortunately, in the physical and structural makeup of many small theatres there is not much glass or glassed areas that could be considered extremely dangerous to a large number of people when this glass is reasonably protected; however, in many large theatres glass has been used extensively in the decoration and certain portions of their physical makeup. In some theatres the doors between the lobby and vestibule are entirely of plate glass, while on both sides of the lobby, and even in the foyer and vestibule, are large display cases covered with plate glass. Ticket booths are likely to be largely of glass, and a large area of glass forms the attraction board of the marquee. Also, the upper part of the standee rail commonly has heavy glass plate as a wind-breaker, while heavy glass chandeliers or luminaires are fastened to lobby, foyer and auditorium ceilings. These glass elements would be a constant hazard in the event of bombings, for concussion alone, without a direct hit, is sufficient to cause breakage of glass.

WHAT CAN BE DONE

In my opinion, all suspended, large glass chandeliers or heavy lighting fixtures should be removed from ceilings. Also, plate glass should be removed from standee rails and venetian blinds or draperies substituted to serve as a wind-breaker or light shield.

In devising protective methods, no set rule can be recommended; each theatre has its own particular problem and limitations. In some theatres the cost of protective safeguards for glass will be high, in others quite reasonable. Nevertheless, everything possible must be done to protect patrons, for if only one human life is saved, it will be worth almost any expense, for practical as well as humanitarian reasons.

Many methods are available for protecting exposed glass in and around the theatre. Up to the present time all glazing of windows, display cases, ticket offices, vestibule doors, etc., has been done with polished plate glass from ¼-inch to $\frac{5}{16}$-inch in thicknesses, which can be had in stock sizes, carrying by even numbers from 6 x 6 inches up to 144 x 240 inches, or 138 x 260 inches.

In some installations, this glass is set with putty and secured with triangular pieces of zinc, known as "glaziers' points," driven into the wood sash over the glass and then covered with putty. In other installations, a thin layer of putty is first put in the rebate of the sash, and the glass is then placed on it and pushed down to a solid bearing. The "glazier points" are driven about 8 or 10 inches apart and the putty is applied over the glass and these points to fill the rebate.

In other installations, the plate glass is back-puttied, as explained above, and finally secured by wooden beads. Now, under ordinary circumstances this gives adequate security to the glass, but under wartime conditions today it doesn't. It will not prevent fracturing or splintering under severe impact from gunfire and bombings.

SUBSTITUTES FOR UNSAFE GLASS

There are available, however, certain types of flat glass, such as laminated safety glass and special tempered glass, as well as wire-glass, that give reasonably good protection against violent scattering of glass chips as the result of severe concussions or repercussions from bombings. If one thinks that the danger of such splintering and fracturing of ordinary plate glass is grossly exaggerated, one should consider a recent blast in a small town in Pennsylvania. In this particular instance many tons of explosives prematurely exploded, shattering or fracturing windows within a 25-mile radius, injuring many people. A heavy bomb when dropped and exploded can do just as much damage to glass within at least a one-mile radius, especially if dropped in a thickly populated area.

Where it is necessary to keep glazed surfaces, as in vestibule doors, display cases and ticket booths, or store fronts at the sides of entrances to theatres, special tempered glass should be installed in place of ordinary plate glass. Plate glass of this type, such as that manufactured by the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company and known as "Herculite," has great mechanical strength. It is from 4½ to 5 times stronger than ordinary plate glass. "Herculite" glass requires no other protective measures against concussion from gunfire and bombings. It can be glazed directly into the existing sash by back-puttying and securing it adequately by wooden beads around its edges.

The next safest glass to use is the laminated safety glass. However, when this type of glass is fractured, it is sufficiently flexible to allow it to be forced out of the frame, with pieces of glass sticking to the plastic filled. But it is not nearly as dangerous as flying splinters from fractured standard plate glass.

Wire-glass is considerably safer than ordinary glass, but it is unsightly. Only in sky-lights over the stage, in obscure windows, in the auditorium, and in the projection room is it suitable. This wire-glass should only be used as a last resort, because fragments of glass will fly from it to some extent.

Tempered glass will be less dangerous under direct fracture than any of the other kinds, for when it is broken it tends to break into tiny fragments having somewhat rounded edges. Due to the light weight of these small fragments they are not blown out very far, nor are they likely to cause serious injury. Tempered glass, when broken, also has a tendency to bind itself more tightly in the frame, even though the bomb splinter goes completely through the glass.

There are various other ways that ordinary plate glass can be protected to minimize the dangerous effects of splintering. An adhered-fabric material can be used

Methods of Dealing With Incendiary Bombs

The procedure and equipment for checking inflammatory action

By SAMUEL BRAVERMAN

HUNDREDS OF thousands of incendiary bombs, each capable of starting its own blaze, were dropped in an eight-hour air raid upon London in April, 1941. In the average well built city only about 15% of the area is occupied by buildings—the balance consisting of roads, lawns, unoccupied lots—while a varying percentage of the buildings are fire-resistant.

Chance of Ignition

Now, assuming uniform pattern and no duplication of coverage, only one out of six or seven incendiary bombs will land on a roof or anything else that will burn. Nevertheless, it is necessary that proper precautions be taken by theatre managements, especially in potential air raid areas, so as to be in a position to avoid unnecessary damage, panic, injuries to patrons, etc.

Here we are concerned with incendiary bombs and the fires caused by certain types of bombs. An incendiary bomb must never be doused with water as this will tend to produce an explosion, thus endangering the fire fighter and spreading the fire. Of course if the bomb is of phosphorous type, liberal use of water in the absence of certain special means is best.

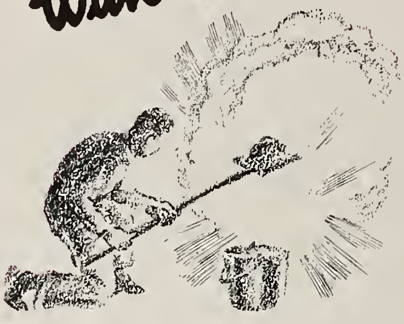
It should be evident that to cope intelligently with incendiary bombs one must know something about them, and by now most theatre managements have acquainted themselves with their characteristics. There is no fire department system in the world that can afford to give adequate protection during or after an air raid. Therefore those in charge of each building must set up their own protection. I suggest that a general inspection of the theatre be made, with all exits checked and cleaning out of all rubbish that is usually found in the false ceiling and other hard-to-get-at locations. The bombs in most cases will penetrate the roof and possibly remain lodged on the floor below.

The proper way to deal with incendiary bombs is as follows:

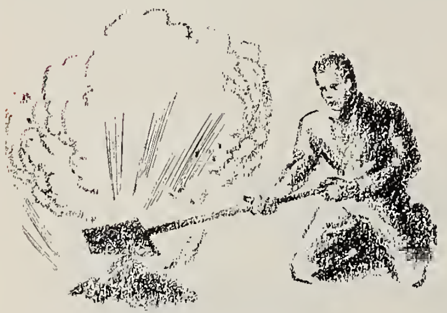
Bomb-Fighting Methods

Approach the bomb in a crouching or crawling position with a bucket of sand and a shovel. Try to cover the bomb with dry sand so as to confine its action so that you can get near enough to scoop it up on the shovel. If the bomb

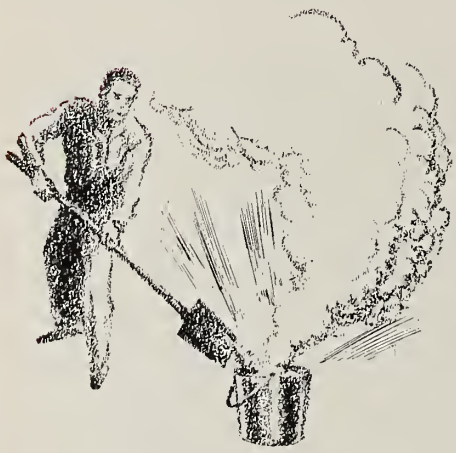
Fighting Incendiary Bombs With Sand



Take sand on long-handled shovel



Cover bomb with sand



Place bomb in sand pail

can be dropped from a window or to some place where it can do no harm, get ride of it that way; otherwise put it in the bucket, on top of the sand, covering it with more sand. Insert a handle through the bale of the pail and carry it out that way.

The Spray Method

One can also use water. To fight a bomb with water you need two men and a stirrup pump. You can put a bomb out by merely spraying water on it. This gives it more oxygen and causes the bomb to burn out faster. In the use of a stirrup pump one person pumps while the other uses the nozzle, lying on the stomach with some means of protection from heat in front. Remember that the water should be sprayed, not played on in a stream. A third person is most useful to check other points for flame, replenish water and relieve the pumper.

It is advisable that a suitable amount of water be stored in pails, buckets, barrels, etc., so that there is enough to combat an incendiary bomb should one come. Never throw the contents of a pail of water on a bomb. If control of the bomb seems doubtful, have an alarm sent to the fire department, but continue fighting the bomb until the firemen arrive or supplies are exhausted.

Carbon Tetrachloride Dangerous

Never use a carbon tetrachloride extinguisher on a bomb. If this is done, dangerous gases will be formed. The soda-and-acid type can be used only when nothing else is handy. You can get a spray effect by putting your thumb partly over the nozzle. However, one extinguisher is not enough to burn out a magnesium bomb and the extinguisher cannot be re-filled in ample time to be of further use.

Bomb-Fighting Equipment

Following is a list of equipment that should be kept ready for the proper fighting of fire by bombs in a theatre: (1) Long-handled shovels, (2) sand pails, (3) stirrup pumps, (4) emergency lighting service, (5) first-aid-kit, (6) heavy gloves, (7) heavy goggles, (8) axes.

These can be arranged so as to make an interesting foyer display and also remain in an accessible spot when needed.

The staff should be trained so that each person has his or her specific job to do when the times comes and not have six people cover the same point and same job.

LIGHTER THAN METAL-EASY TO CLEAN

MODERATE FIRST COST-LONG LIFE!

MODERN technology has been giving us all better and better things for less and less expenditure of time and money. Formica is one of the things science produced for the theater—a surfacing and decorative material with an entirely new type of beauty, with a depth of finish present in nature only in some of the precious stones.

This marvelous material is available in an unlimited number of colors, patterns, combinations of colors, and pictorial and decorative inlays in color.

Formica is hard, durable, non-porous, serves some of the purposes of metals, such as door panels, but is superior to metals because it does not corrode, and is much easier to keep clean without laborious polishing.

Leading theater architects have used Formica for doors, ticket booths, lobby wall paneling, toilet room walls and stalls, decorative panels behind water fountains—which may be fluorescent—and for many other uses.

It is moderate in first cost, installed rapidly by carpenters, and is readily available for either modernizing or new construction jobs. Ask your architect about it.

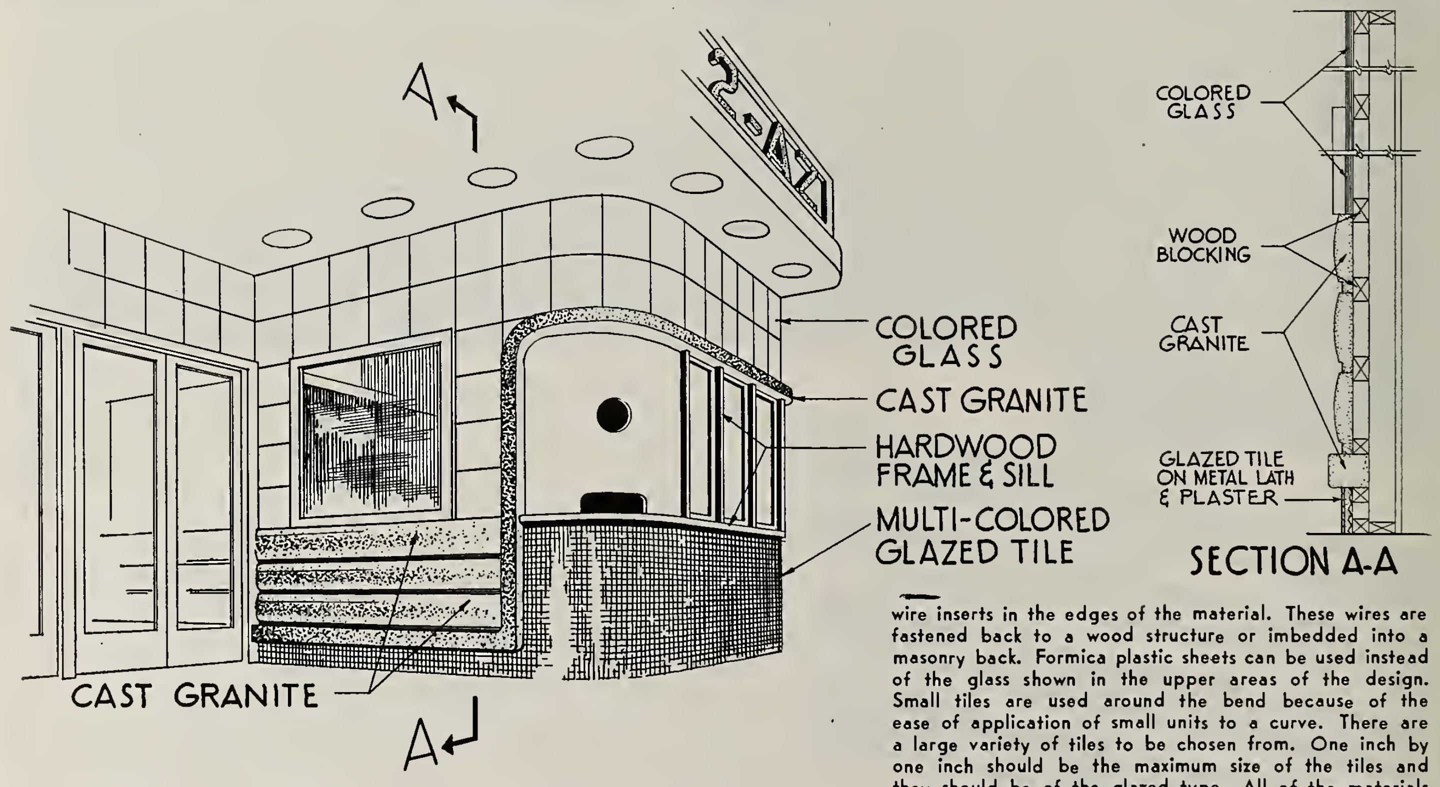
Remodeling under The Government's New Order

ALL REMODELING work done for the duration of the war now comes under Government restrictions and rulings. A new ruling of the War Production Board, designated Conservation Order L-41, permits a maximum expenditure of $5,000 on construction work in any twelve-month period. Under this ruling the use of war priority materials, which consist chiefly of the various metals, remains prohibited.

I have been told that the Federal Housing Authority will be the body which will consider individual cases and make interpretations, although it is a ruling of the War Production Board. Further interpretation may come later to the effect that more than $5,000 may be spent in a 12 month period, subject to the type of materials to be used.

The new WPB ruling does not preclude the possibility of spending money for maintenance or repair work necessary to keep the structure in sound working condition and necessary to render the building safe and fit for service. All damage in wear and tear can also be restored and not be considered construction work coming under this new order. It is advisable, under present conditions, to budget carefully and to allocate judiciously money set aside for improvement, and to apply the maximum amount of the available money to the maintenance and repair items.

While it is true that it will not be possible to bring about the flashy type of sur-



A design to incorporate a built-in box office, display frames and related entrance doors and marquee. All of the materials are non-essential to the war effort. These materials may be fastened back to structural framework of wood or to a masonry back structure of 6-inch terra cotta blocks. Section A-A shows the relationship of the finish materials to the back structure. Actual granite chips are used in making the cast granite shown. These chips weather better than the marble chips used in making cast terrazzo, a material more suitable for interior finishes and floors. The cast granite is made with small wire inserts in the edges of the material. These wires are fastened back to a wood structure or imbedded into a masonry back. Formica plastic sheets can be used instead of the glass shown in the upper areas of the design. Small tiles are used around the bend because of the ease of application of small units to a curve. There are a large variety of tiles to be chosen from. One inch by one inch should be the maximum size of the tiles and they should be of the glazed type. All of the materials indicated may be used effectively in the lobby if added to a basic background of finished wood, veneers or cut mirrors (Flexglass), or fabric-covered plaster. Fabron cloth wall covering is made in a most interesting variety of patterns especially adaptable to theatre interiors. Before any size job is started in actual field work all of the materials needed should be purchased well in advance and be stored until the work begins. It is therefore advisable to have the work done on a labor contract basis, with the owner supplying all of the materials. All of this must be done to avoid the embarrassment caused by the uncertainty of, and possible delay in, the delivery of materials.

face improvement to any great degree under present conditions, there is no reason why theatre buildings cannot be greatly improved merely by repairing and restoring deficient structural and mechanical elements of the theatre, and shabby surfaces.

If you will have $5,000 for spending on improvements, or any amount above that which your local Federal Housing Authority board will permit, it will be advisable to see just where in the theatre it could be most effectively used. Following are two lists of items that might be submitted to the governing board. List No. 1 covers repairs, maintenance and safety. List No. 2 suggests worthwhile improvements to be done under the limited expenditure allowance. These lists are given so that in making application for permission to do work, you may show the governing authorities the amounts you are entitled to spend which do not come under the restrictions, as well as the amounts you propose to spend which do come under the order.

LIST No. 1

A. Reconstruction of floor slopes or steps in any part of the theatre to eliminate hazardous conditions.

B. Reconstruction work in projection room to eliminate fire hazards, as recommended by local and national building construction authorities.

C. Correction of exit facilities to comply with authoritative rulings.

D. Correction of artificial lighting conditions for normal operation safety and blackout precautions.

E. Repairs of roofing leaders and gutters.

F. Repairs of all plumbing fixtures.

G. Repairs and maintenance items for all heating, ventilating and air-conditioning.

H. Repairs to all electrical equipment.

I. Painting and wall covering.

J. Restoration of damaged or broken masonry or glass surfaces.

K. Repair and replacement of all operative hardware in poor working condition.

L. Repair of all cracks and chips in interior surfaces, such as plaster and cement work.

M. Replacing of wraped, broken or badly worn doors or window sashes.

N. Replacement of acoustical material rendered unusable by changes in characteristics of the material, such as clogging of pores, settlement, etc.

O. Replacement of damaged fabric coverings.

P. Replacement of damaged tile floors and walls.

Q. Renewing damaged weather striping and mastic caulking.

R. Any other items which may come under the repair listing.

LIST No. 2

A. Vestibule, lobby and foyer improvements to create a better decorative quality in areas where a drab appearance is severely detrimental because of the fact that they must be illuminated more than any other part of the theatre building.

B. New ticket booth, preferably of the built-in type at one side.

C. Eliminate isolated ticket collection box by using built-into wall type.

D. Improvement in toilet and restroom facilities. Inadequate or poorly placed toilet facilities are one of the items which cannot be neglected, and which have received too little attention in the past.

E. New surface treatment of the walls and ceiling area surrounding the screen to make for a more comfortable viewing of the projected picture.

F. Resloping of seating floor areas where improving of sightlines is needed. This is especially advisable where creaky, poorly constructed wood floors exist. Such a floor should be replaced either by a wood floor that is properly supported and nailed sufficiently to avoid all creaks, end-matching or flooring boards being essential; or, wherever structural support permits, by a concrete and cement-finish floor.

G. Provide manager's office in proper position for most efficient supervision of operation and for control in emergencies.

PETTIGREW & WORLEY, Architects

DESIGNED to serve a Ft. Worth residential section inhabited by people of moderate means, the Tower, a new unit of Interstate Theatres, offers all essential facilities of good-standard exhibition in a compact floor plan and a tasteful but simple architectural treatment of modern character.

Construction is of steel, concrete and masonry with outside walls stuccoed and painted, and front and return ornamented in stucco forms Blue-green ribbed tile finishes the facade to height of 7 feet. Interior finish, including light coves, is hard plaster, except auditorium, which is acoustic plaster. All doors are of natural birch.

The front elevation and returns on each side of the building has horizontal neon tubes in 3-inch troughs to tie in with signs. Reeded effects in the center above marquee is lighted by floods. This combines with marquee flasher border to make an attractive display.

The marquee soffit and vestibule ceiling are continuously troughed on each side—troughs $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide, 2 inches deep, containing white neon. The troughs are on 8-inch centers and run with the building. Additionally, 150-watt silver-neck filament lamps on 24-inch centers are installed between the troughs, giving high sidewalk and vestibule illumination. Marquee and signs follow a color scheme of blue-green with red and cream trim, with neon white for letters and gold and power green for trim.

The interior color scheme employs blue-green for ground and rust, cream and several shades of blue for trim. Carpeting has red ground and gold figure and is laid over 86-ounce lining.

The foyer is lighted by a directional line of shallow glass ceiling luminaires and also by coves; fixtures are lamped in canary yellow, coves have gold neon. The auditorium illumination, all from coves, is gold neon for running light, white neon for house lighting. Additionally, there are indirect fixtures in the balcony.

The Tower seats about 900, with double-seat stagger scheme in the main floor center bank. A parking lot for 150 cars is provided.

The theatre is air-conditioned, with cooling by unit conditioner equipment.

■ Plastic coils ringing fluorescent lamps diffuse the light and can be used for "correction" of color. Available in the theatre field through the National Theatre Supply Company, these coils are made of tenite and fit (as indicated above) tightly over the tube and, aside from the coloration, they have the decorative value suggested in the photograph at right. The coils come in clear, ivory, pink, yellow gold, green, blue and red. Red and clear strands combined "warm" white and daylight fluorescent light; pink coils "naturalize" the glow of daylight fluorescent lamps.

Methods That Help To Conserve Carpeting

HOWEVER careless we may have allowed ourselves to be in normal times about the installation and maintenance of equipment and materials, wartime conservation necessary to continued operation of our theatres, does not permit anything except informed and conscientious attention to these matters. And of the many kinds of equipment and materials used in the theatre, carpet has been one of those too often neglected.

It has been frequently purchased and installed from a "bargain" point of view rather than one giving due recognition to quality and workmanship. The wise theatre owner who bought his carpet for high quality, and who made sure it was properly laid, will see his foresight paying dividends as time goes on. The beauty and life of the fabric will be there when "cheap" carpeting has become an eyesore.

In any case, carpeting installed, be it good or bad, should have a regular and systematic check-up by a competent and reliable carpet man. As a rule, regular employes of the theatre are not expert enough to detect incipient defects and their causes, even though conscientious.

The natural reaction of some exhibitors will be, of course, that their carpet was laid only a couple of years ago and that they are getting along pretty well without this extra checking and maintenance. Although this attitude did not imperil operation in peacetime, it certainly does so now. It is not a question of getting a few weeks or months more wear out of the present carpet, but perhaps years more wear, and surely theatre carpeting should not be actually shabby at any time.

THE "BARGAIN" INSTALLATION

Many a carpet installation has been made "any old way," because of the incompentence or carelessness of the carpet layer, or because the job was contracted for on a bargain basis, or perhaps because the floor conditions were not thoroughly checked to repair bad spots. Also, in many instances, no one was particularly concerned in every little detail that make up a good carpet "laying" job. Now we all must constantly check the little things that contribute to long wear of present carpet, and be extremely careful in the installation of new carpet, so far as it still can be had.

In checking the present carpet on the floor, any "puckers" or wrinkles" on the surface should be eliminated, no matter how small or where located. This "bellying" up of the carpet will cause rapid wear both in the pile and the fabric backing, for the carpet at these points will be rolled severely back and forth under the heavy impact of hundreds of passing feet. This "puckering" or "bellying" up of the carpet is due to the fact that when the carpet was first laid on the floor it was not properly tensioned or "stretched."

IMPORTANCE OF STRETCHING

Carpet when tacked on the floor and not "stretched" properly, especially in dry weather, will tend to expand or get larger when dampness or humidity sets in. The best thing to do in such a case is to pull up the carpet carefully at one end where such a condition exists and re-stretch the area until the "puckers" are eliminated. Then the carpet should be tacked down again, while holding the carpet under even tension.

This re-stretching of the carpet should be done with care, for when too much tension is applied, or the tension is effected by rough and heavy "jolts," the carpet will tear at the fastening nails or be entirely ripped off at the fastened end.

Examine the condition of the carpet at the entrance doors to the standee area. At this location, and especially at one or two doors where the incoming traffic is concentrated, the most wear is bound to be found, even under ideal floor conditions; but undue wear will result rapidly if the door saddles are of the improper type or are badly worn, or the carpet is improperly nailed down at these points.

A door saddle that is even slightly below the level of the carpet will cause the patrons toes and heels to rip into the pile of the carpet and in a short time cause the fabric backing to bulge up from the floor. This condition will cause hazardous tripping and rapid tearing of the carpet. Also, with the carpet up from the floor, no matter how slightly, soil, dirt, dust and moisture will easily accumulate underneath and cause rotting or mildewing of the backing threads.

DOOR SADDLE LEVEL

To reduce undue wear and deterioration of the carpet at these doors, new saddles should be installed that are level or slightly above the top of the carpet pile. In some cases this will mean cutting a little off the bottom of the doors, but it will be worth the expense to do so in order to save the carpeting.

In some cases new holes will have to be drilled as close as 3 inches apart and the carpet nailed down solidly and evenly at the saddles. In the past, and sometimes today, it is the practice of some carpet layers to drill holes from 8 to 12 inches apart, even at the door saddles. This is a bad practice, followed to save time and labor costs to the layer.

Another thing to be checked is whether the carpet ends at the door saddles have "raw" edges; if so, they should be properly bound. However, in most cases, the good carpet layer allows a little more carpet at the ends in order to turn them down and under to avoid "raw" edges.

FLOOR CONDITIONS

Still another thing to check is the floor condition at the doors, as the floor might be broken or uneven, and cracked at the fastening plug holes, making it impossible to keep the carpet flat on the floor. If this is the case, new flooring should be installed with necessary holes drilled, at the most, 4 inches apart, and proper wood plugs inserted. Then the carpet should be nailed down solidly and evenly in place.

In checking the carpet, it is very important to see that the fastening holes are properly spaced, and that the plug inserts are solidly in these holes. When these holes are spaced over 6 inches on centers, or the wood plugs are loose, the carpet is bound to "belly" and permit the accumulation underneath of soil, dirt and dust, to which moisture readily adheres. This condition, if allowed to persist, will surely cause rotting and mildewing of the carpet no matter what the location, the standee, aisles, or stairs, with the resultant rapid disintegration of the fibers of the backing. When the holes are found to be too far apart, new holes should be drilled, with new plug inserts installed. Before doing so, the floor should be thoroughly clean and dry to receive the refastened carpet.

LOCATION OF DRILLED HOLES

A bad practice that can be noticed among carpet installations is the location of the fastening holes at both sides of the aisles, on the main floor as well as in the balcony. In nearly every instance these holes are drilled, on an average, 10 inches apart, and as a rule they are laid out haphazardly in relation to the passage area to the seats. In other words, the fastening hole or holes is at or near the end chair standards. This arrangement means that the carpet is fastened solidly at a point where no cross traffic is encountered; and that the carpet will "belly" up just where the patrons feet scrape as they enter the rows. In consequence, the carpet is badly worn along the edges at these particular points because the heels and toes of the patrons have been constantly ripping into the raised carpet. To overcome a condition of this kind, new holes should be drilled at the edges of the carpet at points near dead center of each portion adjoining passageway between rows. This will bring the edges of the carpet down flat with the level of the floor.

AISLES AND STAIRS

Another bad practice in laying carpet in the aisles is to let the lining come near the edges, thus raising the carpet off the floor. The lining should be in about 1½ inches from the edges to permit the carpet to slope slightly toward the floor at the edges.

This of course does not apply to aisles that are recessed so as to allow the top of the pile to be flush with the floor of the seating area.

In aisles not recessed, as much care should be taken as at the entrance door saddles that the edges of the carpet are not "raw" and that they are either bound or properly turned under, with these edges as nearly flat with the floor as it is possible to make them. In this way there will be no creepage of dirt, gravel or sand underneath.

Recommended method of fastening carpet on stair treads when wood strips are not buried in treads.

In a previous article the writer dealt with the evil of a cross-seam at the head of the aisles (in line with the standee rail). This condition is a common fault and causes carpet trouble in many theatres. At the aisle heads the traffic is concentrated, while the pull at the seam is terrific due to the incline of the floor in the aisles; patrons dig their heels deeply and vigorously into the carpet coming up and going down the aisles.

The life of the carpet on stairs can be increased considerably if it is fastened correctly. Make sure that the proper wood strip is used and fastened correctly to the stairs. In many installations the wood strips are shaped like a right-angled triangle—that is, one side is fitted to the riser, the other side laid flat on the stair tread, and the third side tapered off from the riser face to the tread. These wood strips are installed in the corners where the tread and the riser meet, then the carpet is nailed to the angled side of the strips. The result is that on walking on these stairs the strips can be felt, due to the thin bulge beyond the level of the carpet. This method of fastening will hold the carpet in place for a while, but when the pull is heavy, as under constant traffic, the carpet and nails gradually pull away, due to the fact that the pull on the carpet is nearly in a straight line with the nails driven into the strip.

Now in stair carpet the wear of the carpet shows itself more quickly on the backing fabric than on the pile. This is because when the carpet shifts back and forth on account of improper or loose fastening, the back is rolled severely over the tread and

For lining stair carpet, ⅜-inch sponge rubber is excellent, but it is not available (generally speaking). The sponge rubber is laid on rubber glue applied to the face and nosing of the tread, then the regular hair lining is laid over this, attached with linoleum cement, and finally the carpet.

AISLE WIDTH CARPET
FLOOR
LINING
LINING SHORTENED 1 1/2" AT EACH SIDE TO ALLOW THE CARPET TO OVERLAP PROPERLY AT THE EDGES

Proper method of fastening carpet in aisles to prevent rapid wear at the chairs due to ingress and egress.

With sponge rubber off the market carpet on stairs can be fastened rigidly by installing a plywood strip of about ⅜-inch by 1¾-inch the width of the stair, flat on each tread and against the riser. This wood strip should be fastened rigidly to the tread by drilling holes and inserting wood plugs, then finally driving nails into the plugs. In this way the nails are driven straight down into the tread and the pull on the carpet will be at right angles to the nails, making it impossible to pull them out from foot action. This is the reason why carpet fastened to flat strips buried in stair treads in new construction will hold indefinitely and prevent excessive wear and tear.

A substitute for wood strips can be effected by laying a patent cement called "Kellastone" on the stair treads near the risers, shaped like an ordinary wood slat; however, care must be taken that it is sufficiently thick for penetration and the holding effect of the nails. Also, hydrochloric or muriatic acid should first be applied to the concrete or marble treads for proper binding of the "Kellastone."

If your carpet wears through exceptionally fast on the tread nosings, the cause may be a metal rim that is buried in the concrete at this point. This metal rim is usually installed on exposed concrete stairs to prevent rapid wear, but when the stairs are to be covered by carpet they should never be used. What happens is that the smooth surface of this metal rim allows the lining to rub it at the slightest pull or strain until finally the lining is worn through, and then the carpet. In most cases where there was unusual wear of the carpet at the nosings the writer has found upon inspection that the metal nosing was polished bright by the constant shifting of the lining and carpet over it. In case this rim cannot be removed, cementing the lining with good linoleum cement will help prevent shifting to a certain extent.

SPOT CLEANING

In keeping the surface of the carpet in a clean and sanitary condition, make sure that the cleaners used contain no alkali or harmful acids. As is well known, most spots or stains are easiest to remove when they are fresh, so it is advisable to keep handy a "first-aid" cleaning kit. This kit should contain (1) a bubble cleaner and carbon tetrachloride, which can be used effectually on many common spots or stains; (2) pure soap; (3) saddle soap for cleaning seat leather; (4) household ammonia water; and (5) a good supply of clean, soft cotton rags.

For removing paint spots that are fresh, turpentine can be used, then the area should be sponged with warm water and soap-suds or bubble cleaner. If it is old paint, the best method is to use a solution of one part acetone to one part cellosolve if this solution can be obtained. After using such a solution, turpentine should be used also, being afterwards sponged off with soap suds (always be careful not to get carpeting wet with water while on the floor; this causes mildew, matting down and accelerated deterioration).

Grease and oil spots on carpet may be removed with carbon tetrachloride. Pour a small quantity on the spot or spots and rub gently with a clean cloth, all the while working in toward the center; then press clean blotting paper to the dampened area until the paper shows no stain. After the area has dried, rub it gently with suds of pure soap.

To remove ice cream spots, sponge the area with carbon-tetrachloride, then sponge off dry with soap suds. In removing fruit stains, first scrape off the excess pulp, then sponge lightly with a little hot water, but do not use soap. To remove lip-stick stains, pour carbon tetrachloride directly on the spot and blot clean with blotting paper. Remember, in all cases, never to leave areas of the carpet wet or soapy.

REMOVAL OF GRIT

All gritty material, such as ordinary street dirt, sand, etc., should be removed almost as quickly as it accumulates. When it is ground down into the pile and neglected it reduces the life of the carpet greatly. Daily vacuum cleaning with equipment that really cleans, is therefore imperative, and it is done in most theatres. In addition it is advisable to have a porter or usher use an ordinary carpet sweeper throughout traffic areas every little while during operating hours, to get rid of surface dirt as quickly as feasible.

Another good idea is to shift the furniture occasionally in the restrooms to avoid badly worn spots in areas that otherwise would be consistently open.

Carpeting around water fountains—and today we have soda fountains, too!—can be protected by placing corrugated rubber matting, if available, at these heavily used areas. Also, if available, fibre runners should be procured for laying in traffic lanes during wet weather.

If it is possible to obtain new carpet from the distributors stock, even "drop" patterns or odd designs, it would be a good idea to purchase it for installation in the theatre now or later on. In this way at least some kind of replacement could be made in areas badly worn. In storing such carpeting in closed rooms, it should be properly protected against dampness and moths. Old carpet should always be thoroughly cleaned and washed before storage. Moth repelling materials, such as paradichlorbenzene, should be sprinkled over the carpet often enough to have the odor always in the room.

In picking up old carpet that is in reasonably fair condition, for re-use in other areas or for patching, care should be taken that it is not ripped or torn unnecessarily. It will pay to have regular carpet men do this picking up as they can be held responsible and probably would be more careful than the theatre staff, which also might not appreciate the necessity of extreme care to avoid ripping off the wood strips on the stairs. Every piece of carpet, every wood slat, nail, etc., is essential to the continued maintenance of the theatre in times like these.

for covering the windows in the auditorium, if any, and those of the projection room or store fronts adjoining the entrance to the theatre. This adhered-fabric does not make the breakage of the glass less likely; it does afford some means of protection against flying slivers of glass when applied properly, according to the size and weight of the plate glass. In any case, this adhered-fabric must be applied on both sides of the glass to get maximum. It is not suitable for rough or figured glass surfaces, however.

Another protective treatment for glass is to brush on it a cellulose nitrate lacquer, and after it has become sticky, to press a sheet of fabric or strong textile netting into it so that the entire glass area is covered. This fabric or textile material should be securely fastened to a frame or other construction supporting the glass, and it is a good idea to have the fabric overlap the frame. When this fabric has been set in place, a coat of lacquer or varnish should be applied over the entire surface.

Cellulose nitrate lacquer is readily available at the present time. Strong and adhesive textile strips can also be used, but they do not offer too much protection against the scattering of fragments. If used, these strips should not be less than 1½ inches wide, and the open spaces of glass between the strips should not be more than 2 to 4 inches each way. The ends of these strips should be securely fastened to the frame of the glass. Many of the store fronts which have been plastered with strips, applied haphazardly, are giving the owners a false sense of security. Cheese cloth, muslin or lace netting can also be used, but they offer only minimum protection.

Glycerine glues, and even ordinary flour paste can be used very satisfactorily. Varnish and rubber latex adhesives should not be used, since they will lose their adhesiveness in a few months; nor should liquid coatings and paper strips be employed, for they are very weak in resisting flying splinters of glass.

When sheets or strips of transparent plastic films are used they should be at least 0.002-inch thick and stuck in place securely. In case cellulose film is used, it should be mixed with a mucilage made of gum arabic containing 10 to 15% of glycerine for maximum protection. This film should then be varnished after the application to make it waterproof and mildew-resistant.

A fair adhesive for the cellulose acetate film is a composition of rosin plasticized with castor oil (half as much as the rosin) and properly thinned with menthanol.

PROTECTION OF MIRRORS

Special care should be taken to protect properly large mirrors in lounge and toilet rooms against shattering. In case wire netting is used, it should not be over a ½-inch mesh; a large mesh will have less effect in arresting flying splinters of glass. To offer maximum protection the wire mesh should be about $\frac{1}{16}$-inch thick and solidly embedded in a tough plastic film. The wire should be zinc-coated to prevent rapid deterioration. The netting should be mounted on a light wooden frame the size of the glass area, hinged at the top so that it can be swung away from the glass for regular conditions, and be let down easily in case of an air-raid. If hinging is not practical the frames can be made to hang from hooked hangers so that it may swing away from the glass and thus lengthen the time during which it is absorbing the blow. The netting should be as close to the glass as possible without touching it. Unfortunately, wire netting is not readily available at this time without a priority rating of A-1-J or better.

Ordinary cloth curtains offer only a moderate degree of protection against scattering fragments of glass; however, two or three layers of burlap, of obtainable, hanging loosely or attached to a swinging frame, may be used for covering the glass where other and better means cannot be employed. Reinforcing the glass with some bracing device is not recommended as it will increase the liability of fracture. A glass having a little freedom of movement is less vulnerable than glass fixed rigidly.

In "blacking-out" certain glass areas, such as a skylight over a stage, projection room windows, etc., care should be taken that the proper paints are used. Except in the case of tempered glass, the use of opaque paint or dense black on plate glass involves the hazard of breakage due to painted absorption of solar heat by the paint. In general, this hazard is reduced as the color of the paint approaches white, and as the pigmentation of the paint becomes more translucent. Only dirt colored

Making Sure You Get All Possible Projection Light for Your Money

• These are times when waste takes on special menace, when efficiency must be striven for to assure continued effective operation of our theatres. In projection circles, including unions, the need for study to increase efficiency is being emphasized. The methods for measuring the operation of your light-lens system offered in this article are relatively easy; they require only a knowledge of simple arithmetic. And much of the material is not readily obtainable elsewhere.

THE GREAT mobilization of all vital raw materials to war production has directly affected the availability of finished product necessary to motion picture projection. The purpose of this article is to familiarize more projectionists with the basic principles of the optical system used with present day reflector arcs so that through a better understanding he may operate this system at top efficiency.

CHARLES E. SHULTZ

Efficiency is no longer only a matter of economy; it is a national duty to conserve the vital necessities of war. Projection carbons and electrical energy may be unnecessarily wasted if the optical system fails to deliver its full measure of efficiency. This article has been prepared to demonstrate the optical principles of the reflector arc projection system and to enable the projectionist to check his system accurately, to acquaint him with the efficiency of his particular equipment in comparison with greatest results to be anticipated from that type of equipment.

ARC POWER

The four items directly responsible for projection efficiency may be listed as follows: (1) Arc power; (2) Carbons; (3) Reflector; (4) Lens.

The question of arc power in this paper does not refer to any specific type of rectifier, generator, or other means of converting line power to arc power. As the present war conditions make the purchase of this equipment impossible, or nearly so, your present equipment must be made to serve efficiently.

Arc power is considered only in relationship to the carbons used in any given instance. Tables for optimum results are based on arc power recommendations for any given carbon. By use of these recommended tables the maximum intensity and proper crater area at an efficient carbon consumption rate are obtained. One should be reminded these days that—

1. Greater arc amperage than recommended results in greatly accelerated rate of consumption with very little increase in intensity or crater area. It also results in carbon and power waste.
2. Less arc amperage than recommended produces a smaller, less evenly distributed crater of poor color and lower intensity. This practice does not warrant the slower rate of carbon consumption which results.
3. Higher arc voltage than recommended often produces unstable burning and consumes a higher wattage for the same intensity.
4. Lower arc voltage than recommended results in a weak, hard to strike arc in which an insulating tip often forms on the negative carbon. Such an arc is easily blown out by draft and does not warrant the saving in wattage accomplished.

CARBONS

Figure 1 shows the recommended crater size for various Suprex carbons when operated at recommended arc power. It is important that the proper carbons and arc power are used for the size screen that is being illuminated if efficient operation is to be maintained.

In a later portion of this paper tables will be given to enable the reader to determine the proper screen intensity obtainable from various types of equipment. Should you find your screen intensity to be considerably higher than that shown for recommended use, smaller carbons and correspondingly less arc power should be used for efficiency.

REFLECTORS

The modern reflector arc employs an ellipsoidal reflector to collect the light from the arc crater and focus it upon the aperature of the projector. These reflectors vary in size and focus, but the principle of their operation is always the same. Figure 2 illustrates an ellipse. The foci of the ellipse are indicated as "1st focus" and "2nd focus."

The broken lines represent the position assumed in the projection optical system by the crater of the positive carbon and the film line.

An ellipse is a curve generated by a point moving in a plane so that the sum of the distances from this point to two fixed points (the foci) shall be constant.

That is, the sum of distance Z plus distance Y is equal to the sum of distance W plus distance V. In referring to such distances in this article, we shall call the shorter distance, such as Z or W, the focus; and refer to the longer distances, such as Y or V, as the working distance.

Figure 3 illustrates the three component parts of the projection lighting system—the reflector, the light source, and the film line. The figure also indicates the focus and working distance when they are measured along the broken line representing the axis of the system.

REFLECTION OF CRATER IMAGE

As every part of an ellipsoidal curve will throw a complete "spot," the complete image of the crater thrown on the aperture is composed of an infinite number of superimposed "spots," or discs of light, each one progressively smaller as reflected, respectively, from center to outer parts of an ellipsoid; thus the outer areas form the smallest of these discs and produce the bright center of the screen image.

If we were to paint the entire surface of an ellipsoidal reflector with black paint so that no light could be reflected from it, then remove this paint in one very tiny little spot about the size of the head of a pin, we would find that no matter where this is done on the reflecting surface, a complete image of the crater of the positive carbon would be focused at the aperture, but would, of course, be very dim since an extremely small percentage of the reflecting surface would be utilized.

By removing another bit of paint on any other part of the same curve, another focused image, or "spot," would be formed, superimposed over the first, and the image would be approximately twice as bright as the first "spot" had been alone. It also would be noted in this experiment that the nearer the center hole of the reflector this tiny area of the reflecting surface was used, the larger would be the focused image of the crater. The nearer the outer edge of

Dr. Braddock's Microscope Was Commissioned Today

DR. BRADDOCK wants a new microscope — a Bausch & Lomb Microscope . . . and he's going to get it. It won't be today, though, for today America commissioned a new cruiser.

On this ship there are many optical instruments with a myriad of optical parts, made by the same hands that, in other times, might be grinding the lenses for Dr. Braddock's microscope. There are range finders fore and aft, and a score of smaller ones in strategic places about the ship. The glasses with which the officers scan the horizon are Bausch & Lomb products. Yes, and there's a B&L Microscope, a duplicate of the one Dr. Braddock wants, in the laboratory of the ship's hospital.

Dr. Braddock still wants his microscope, but because he knows these things he is willing to wait. Thousands of "Dr. Braddocks" are making earlier victory possible.

Throughout the Bausch & Lomb plant, optical engineers and optical craftsmen are working long and tirelessly to further America's war effort. The lessons they are learning in the white heat of the drive for Victory will be available later to further the peacetime interests of science and industry.

the reflector this little reflecting point was used, the smaller would be the image of the crater. This image would be oval rather than circular in shape.

RATIO OF MAGNIFICATION

Let us start from the central area of the reflector at the center hole and measure up to the face of the positive carbon which will be the focus of the mirror. We will then measure from the face of the mirror at the center hole to the aperture of the projector (film line). This is the working distance of the reflector. By dividing this focus into the working distance we obtain the ratio of magnification for the largest disc of light forming the "spot."

Measure from the outer section of the reflector to the face of the positive carbon and from the outer section of the reflector to the aperture. Divide the focus into the working distance to obtain the ratio of magnification for the smallest disc of light:

$$\text{Ratio of magnification} = \frac{\text{Working distance}}{\text{Focus}}$$

The distances from different points on the surface of the reflector are not alike, although the sums of their working distances and foci are always equal if the focus and working distance are at the foci of the original ellipse, and if they fall at conjugate focus at the same point; but the "spots" formed are of unequal diameter and area.

For example, going back to our surface covered with paint, let us suppose that we had a little point of reflected light from the center of the reflector which produces a "spot" of a given size at the aperture. We would measure from this point on the reflector to the face of the positive carbon (Figue 2), which is the focus. Then we would take another measurement from this point to the aperture of the projector which is the working distance. Divide this focus into the working distance to obtain the ratio which when multiplied by the size of the crater of the positive carbon will determine the size of the "spot" at the aperture reflected from this little point on the surface. Any other point on the surface of an ellipsoidal reflector may be computed in exactly the same way.

To determine the diameter of "spots" formed from any part of an ellipsoidal reflector we multiply the ratio of magnification taken from that point, by the size of the crater formed on the positive carbon.

The diagonal of a standard projector aperture measures 26 mm. A circle drawn touching the four corners of the aperture will be 26 mm. in diameter, which is the smallest "spot" that will completely cover that aperture.

To find the area of this "spot" multiply its diameter by its diameter, then multiply this result by 0.7854. That is, its area equals the square of the diameter times 0.7854; therefore the area of a "spot" 26 mm. in diameter may be computed thus:

$26 \times 26 = 676$ (this represents the square of the diameter of the "spot").

$676 \times 0.7854 = 530.93$, which is the area in square millimeters of a "spot" 26 mm. in diameter.

Let us suppose we are using an 8 mm. carbon operating at normal amperage feeding a 14-inch reflector with a working distance of 32 inches and a focus of 5⅛ inches at the central area. By division, as previously shown, we find the ratio of magnification to be 6.24; that is—

$$\text{Ratio of magnification} = \frac{32''}{5\tfrac{1}{8}''}$$

If the size of the carbon is 8 mm the crater will be approximately 23/32, or .71875 of the size of the physical diameter of the carbon; therefore $.71875 \times 8$ mm. $= 5.75$ mm. (the diameter of the crater). Multiplying the factor for the ratio of magnification by the diameter of the crater of the positive carbon, $6.24 \times 5.75 = 35.88$ mm. (the diameter of the "spot" at the aperture measured from the center hole position of the reflector). This will be the largest "spot" formed from any part of the surface.

These figures are rather general, as the slightest discrepancy in the focus measurement may bring about a material difference in the result. Great care must be exercised in measuring this focus; however, if measurement of focus is accurate within a 64th of an inch, reasonably comprehensive results can be obtained. Much greater tolerance in measuring the working distance is permissible without seriously altering the accuracy of the result.

With an understanding of the functions of an ellipsoidal reflector it becomes necessary to consider a method of measuring the potential light gathering ability of such a reflector.

Optical equipment is commonly measured in terms of relative aperture. Relative aperture is the relationship between the focus and the diameter. The relative aperture is commonly referred to as the F speed. This designation does not evaluate the transmission or reflecting power of the instrument; it merely indicates the relationship of focus to diameter.

The F speed of an ellipsoidal reflector is measured by dividing the working distance minus the depth of the reflector, by the diameter of the reflecting surface. That is—

$F =$ Speed of reflector
$W =$ Working distance of reflector
$X =$ Depth of reflector
$D =$ Diameter of reflecting surface

$$F = \frac{W - X}{D}$$

The formula is worked out like this, if $F =$ speed of reflector; $W = 32\tfrac{1}{2}$ inches, or 32.5; $X = 1\ 31/32$ inches, or 1.97; and $D = 13\tfrac{7}{8}$ inches, or 13.875. Then—

$$F = \frac{32.50 - 1.97}{13.875} = \frac{30.53}{13.875} = 2.2.$$

Thus a reflector with a working distance of 32½ inches, a depth of 1 31/32 inches, and a reflecting surface of 13⅞ inches diameter, has a speed of F/2.2.

motion picture projection is beyond the scope of this article. It is sufficient here to note that, regardless of their design, the function is to image the film upon the screen.

The focus of a compound lens, as every projectionist knows, is referred to as the "equivalent focus," or E.F. This designation means that the compound lens may be referred to as a unit with a magnification equal to a simple single lens of equal focus. Therefore (disregarding such factors as transmission, resolution, chromatic and spherical abberation) the compound lens is identical in function to the simple single lens.

No matter what type of projection lens is used, it is necessary to understand how to evaluate the magnification which determines the width of picture that a lens of a given focus will project at a given distance.

The following equations will determine these values. Let us assume that f = focus of lens in inches; d = distance to screen in feet; i = width of picture in feet; o = width of film aperture in inches.

To find Focus—
$$f = \frac{o \times d}{i}$$

To find Width of Picture in Feet—
$$i = \frac{o \times d}{f}$$

To find Distance to Screen in Feet—
$$d = \frac{f \times i}{o}$$

To find Width of Film Aperture, in Inches—
$$o = \frac{i \times f}{d}$$

HOW CALCULATIONS ARE MADE

Let us assume known values in each equation for purposes of demonstration. If f = 4 inches; d = 100 feet; i = 20.625 feet; o = .825 inches; then—

Substituting in the equation for Focus—
$$f = \frac{.825 \times 100}{20.625} = \frac{82.5}{20.625} = 4$$
or $f = 4$ inches.

Substituting in the equation for Width of Picture—
$$i = \frac{.825 \times 100}{4} = \frac{82.5}{4} = 20.625$$
i = 20.625 feet

Substituting in the equation for Distance to Screen—
$$d = \frac{4 \times 20.625}{.825} = \frac{82.5}{.825} = 100$$
d = 100 feet.

Substituting in the equation Width of Aperture—
$$o = \frac{20.625 \times 4}{100} = \frac{82.5}{100} = .825$$
o = .825 inches

SPEED OF LENS

Now that the function of the lens is understood, we must find the F speed of the lens to evaluate its relative aperture.

To determine this F speed we divide the focus by the diameter.

$$\text{F speed} = \frac{\text{focus}}{\text{diameter}}$$
$$\text{or, } F = \frac{f}{D}$$

In determining this speed we must measure the smallest opening of the lens because this limits the amount of light which can pass through any given lens. For example, let us assume that we have a lens of 4-inch focus with the smallest opening measuring 1 13/16 inches in diameter. F = F speed; f = focus in inches; D = diameter of smallest opening in inches.

$$F = \frac{f}{D}$$

Let us assume these values: F = 2.2; f = 4 inches; D = 1 13/16 inches, or 1.8125. Then—

$$F = \frac{4}{1.8125} = 2.2$$
F = 2.2 speed of lens.

We now see that the two elements of the optical system, the reflector and the lens, are related by their F speed.

[TO BE CONTINUED]

[In the May 30th issue Mr. Shultz will deal with the entire optical system, and also make recommendation for maintenance practices that help keep the light-lens equipment at operating efficiency as long as possible. . . . F. H. RICHARDSON'S
COMMENT on PROJECTION

Solving the Mystery Of An Unsteady Image

W. W. GEBHARD, a brother of Local Union 639, IATSE, believes he can solve the problem of the "Mysterious Unsteady Image" which was worrying Brother Hohannsen, as we told you in the March 7th issue of BETTER THEATRES. Brother Gebhard comes to the rescue with the following:

F. H. R.

"First, let me introduce myself. I am a projectionist, or operator, whichever you prefer. I understand a projectionist is supposed to know it all, while an operator is still learning. I'm still learning something new every day, so guess I am an operator."

"Not so, Brother. An operator is one who doesn't study, doesn't learn and doesn't want to.

"I work at the Belle Meade theatre in Nashville, Tenn., a deluxe suburban theatre," continues Gebhard. "The set-up is good. We have Simplex sound system, Wenzel projectors, Morelite Suprex lamps, and G. E. copper oxide rectifiers.

"I experienced the same trouble [as Hohannsen] with a print of 'Hold That Ghost.' The picture was perfectly steady up to the middle of the reel, then suddenly it began to jump all over the screen. After the show I ran this reel again, out of frame, and discovered that the frame line was perfectly steady, but the picture itself was unsteady.

"This unsteadiness is introduced in making the positive print from the negative in the laboratory and is not the fault of the projector. The film base itself is perfect, as Eastman confirmed. No doubt if you had been able to send them a long enough piece of the film they could have explained this unsteadiness.

"I am basing my opinion on my experience with making 16-mm. prints on both continuous and step printers, which is basically the same as 35-mm. This unsteadiness is caused by dirt on the sprocket of the printer, the same as dirt on the intermittent sprocket of the projector; or improper tension on the printing gate, or worn gears on the printers, etc."

Some Tips on Projection From a Weather Man

THE JOB OF Private Frank R.McLean, Headquarters Squadron, 3rd Bomber Command, MacDill Field, Tampa, Fla., but normally a projectionist, is to make the weather behave. He writes:

"If this is somewhat disconnected, forgive it, for it is an unearthly hour in the middle of the night and I am trying to keep the weather station going. By time the weather map is ready the teletype machine is on the blink again and I have to fix that (I forgot to tell you I am also a teletype mechanic). After working with projection equipment, teletype is a snap.

"I just heard from home and things are going very well without me. Would hate to find out I am not indispensable. Can't tell you the exact temperature because it is a military secret, but lately I have seen a red robed guy with horns lurking around.

"I am enclosing several ideas which I think are quite brilliant, even if no one else does. One of my pet vices has been keeping a record of all kinds of freak troubles and ideas. I am passing some of them on to you:

"No. 1. As a substitute for grease pencil, when it is desired to make a permanent mark on a print, use white fingernail polish which can be obtained at any dime store. The bottle comes equipped with a brush suitable for applying, and the mark will not smear and cause film damage, as would a grease pencil. This does not mean that any mark should be made on either the picture or sound track area. A thin line can be painted over the frame line, and such a mark is especially useful to indicate the starting frame, when a reel is to be started from any point other than the leader, as when it is desirable to eliminate the often superfluous and rather boring trademark on the first reel of a feature.

"No. 2. Many items of projection room equipment use Allen, or hollow head set screws, and it is not uncommon for the small wrench required for these to be missing when most needed. A substitute can be had by breaking off the tang of a three-cornered file at a place where it is of the proper size. This trick once saved a show for me and might do the same for some brother projectionist.

"No. 3. One of the greatest problems in projection seems to be film 'jitters,' especially in new prints. While I know of no cure-all, I have found in sixteen years of projection experience that in a large percentage of cases the trouble lies not so much in green emulsion and tension adjustment as in the alignment of the E-3 intermittent film guide assembly (Simplex and Super-Simplex projectors). The curved surfaces of both G-126-E shoes must match the curvature of the sprocket face exactly. This requires proper forming of the H-118-E holder.

"When adjusting these I position them so that with the film trap door fully closed, the surfaces of the guide and the sprocket face just meet. Then when the film is Droll processed carbons provide a milled male end and a drilled female end. You simply join two of them and clip with a sleeve of pure copper, which matches exactly the copper coating on the carbon and which is consumed without altering light quality or intensity. When a carbon is burned to about 3" it is fitted onto the next carbon. No dirt, delay, work, or machine to buy. Burn every inch of every carbon.

CUT CARBON COSTS 10% TO 25%

Available in: Negatives, 6 mm x 9", 6.5 mm x 9", 7 mm x 9", and Positives, 6 mm x 12", 7 mm x 12" x 14", 8 mm x 12" x 14". Also High Intensity 13.6 mm x 22" (machined for adapters) which provide 20 minutes more burning time per trim.

threaded, there is a very light tension at this point, which holds the film properly on the sprocket. If the E-3 presses too tightly, it may hold the film trap door slightly open, causing insufficient tension on the P-100-E and S-580-E shoes. Also, if the E-3 is not close enough to the sprocket, the film will ride up on the sprocket teeth, whereupon an unsteady picture is sure to result.

"Needless to say, the G-126-E shoes should be replaced at the first sign of uneven or excessive wear. Of course, this is not the trouble in all cases, but the fact that in one year, in one theatre, I encountered only two cases of 'jitters,' both slight, in spite of the fact that at least one-third of the prints used were new, should indicate that proper projection adjustment will aid greatly in eliminating trouble of this kind."

Many of our good brothers will thank you for your suggestions. We hope you will send in more from time to time.

Helper Man Helps Himself to Managing Job

A PLEASANT surprise is a letter from our good friend, Barney DeVietti. Says he:

"Gee Whiz, someone should give me a swift kick for waiting so long to write such a swell guy! Well, after that opener, I had better introduce myself all over again: My name is Barney DeVietti, and when I was a regular student of the Bluebook School (which I miss muchly) I was a projectionist in the Strand theatre, Helper, Utah. I dropped out of the school when I was made manager of the Strand, and this is my first letter since that event, some six years ago. I managed the Strand for about two years and then was sent to Price, Utah —population 6,000—to take over the newly constructed Price theatre for the same circuit, Huish Theatre Enterprises. The Price seats about 900, is modern and up to the minute in every respect. In the projection room, we have Super-Simplex projectors, Cyclex lamps and W. E. sound.

"After I was in Price about a year, my boss took over the Carbon theatre and six months later bought out the Utah theatre, so now I have all three theatres to manage. The Carvon and Utah both have Super-Simplex with Strong hi-lo lamps. In the Carbon we have Western Electric sound, and at the Utah we have RCA.

"It was really through my knowledge of projection that I got my opportunity to step up a notch in the theatre business. It so happened that my boss had me check up on the entire circuit twice each year; that is, check up on projectors, lamps, generators, etc—and in one of the towns on one of my visits I had to take over the theatre for about three weeks due to illness of the manager. I guess the boss thought I did O.K. because it was just a short time later that I was promoted.

"Even though I have not written I have nevertheless followed your comments in BETTER THEATRES and have never missed a single issue. You have done so much for the advancement of projection and helped so many fellows!"

Congratulations to you, Barney. I wish I could come out and see how a projectionist runs a theatre. I'll bet my bottom dollar the projectionists under you don't have to use makeshift equipment and beg for needed parts, and in return I feel sure you will have nothing but the best in results.

Seventeen Years Old And Still Going Strong!

A LETTER from our young friend, John A. Ettlinger, Jr., is accompanied by a photograph which he took himself. He writes:

"I am enclosing a picture I turned out down in the dark room this morning. I hope it is good enough so you will find room for it in the next issue of BETTER THEATRES. It depicts Joseph DiFrancisco, manager and projectionist of the Cheshire theatre here in Cheshire, Conn. The equipment shown is Super-Simplex heads with Simplex sound and Peerless low-intensity lamps. The theatre itself is small, only 400 seats, but we all thing it is tops. Sorry I could not get more of the equipment in, but after all, with a good looking guy like Joe standing there with a halo around his head, no one will look at the equipment any way. Everything in the projection room is adequate, convenient and well taken care of, I can assure you.

"Since I last wrote you I have changed

Copper can be Saved by Reducing Arc Current

An immediate saving of approximately 20% of the copper used on copper coated projector carbons can be made by reducing the current at the arc from the maximum to the minimum amperage recommended for the trim in use.

Added to the saving in copper will be a substantial saving in power and a lower rate of carbon consumption.

The resulting loss of light will be sufficiently small that an acceptable show can still go on.

Exhibitors and projectionists are urged to adopt this economy measure immediately. It is one more way in which the motion picture industry can contribute to the success of the nation's war effort.

Give or sell your copper drippings from the lamp house and peelings from butt ends to the nearest scrap dealer, unless otherwise instructed by our government.

schools and am now attending the Cheshire Academy. Next year, if I can get in and the draft does not lower itself to accommodate me, I will be in the motion picture school of the University of Southern California, learning to become a cinematographer—or something.

"Here at Cheshire I am doing 16-mm. sound work, as we have films every Saturday night. I am also acting as stage manager for the dramatic club. Due to state laws governing projection, which say one must be 21 years of age before becoming a projectionist (I am 17—still laboriously studying the Bluebook of Projection), I cannot do much work with Joe, though I would like to."

Well, I have always said a man should have a genuine interest in all phases of the work he chooses to "get into," and young Ettlinger certainly has that in his favor.

The Only Step Toward Union Membership

THE LADS who want to get in a union and can't—they keep a-writing. Such a letter has just arrived from Leo K. Thomas, projectionist at the Strand theatre, in Jesup, Ga. He writes:

"For a long time I have read your articles and from them have got many ideas for the improvement of my work. It seems that a majority of those who write you have some difficulty pertaining to projection which they wish to have ironed out and, as I understand the matter, that is what your column is for. In my case, however, it is not projection trouble I wish to be helped with, but instead I wish you would tip me off on how to become a union projectionist.

"I have six years of experience in projection and have worked with many types of projectors during that time. In fact, I have had experience with about everything from Grandpa Powers to his young Grandson, Simplex E-7. To date I have never met with any trouble too great for me to thaw out for myself. I feel that for the most part, if projectionists who have trouble would just stop a minute and use their heads they could work out a good many of their problems by themselves. Very often the problem is only some little thing, such as a shutter being out of time, but a service engineer is called in to find out what's wrong.

"I honestly believe I work just as hard or harder than do the projectionists in Radio City Music Hall, but to date have drawn as little pay as any one in our profession. I want, and have wanted for a long time, to join a projectionists' union, but it seems that a small town projectionist has about as much chance of getting in as a farmer's son has of getting a job in a city selling, say, insurance."

To all in such a situation the only advice I can possibly offer is to talk to the business agent of the nearest local union and get his reaction. Find out if they need men. Be sure to be able to pass a stiff examination if the need arises. Study to be ready. In some cases it is an easy matter for a working projectionist to become a member of a union, but in others it is exceedingly difficult. Without knowing just what has been done, just what union one wishes to enter, whether there has been any difficulty with the union, etc., I can give no advice except to see the business agent. Each local deals with its own membership as it sees fit.

Out-of-Focus Effect On One Side of Screen

OUT-OF-FOCUS trouble is reported by a theatre in the Bronx, New York City. The letter explains:

"From the day of opening late in 1940 we have found the right side of the screen to be always out of focus. Just why, we are at a loss to explain. . . . We have recently had our lenses coated, but this does not seem to help the trouble any. The light is brighter, but that is about all. . . We have tried to move the screen back and forth on the right side, thinking this might solve the problem. It didn't work."

There is very little information in this letter on which to work; however, there are several conditions which might cause the trouble. If the screen is warped, one side of the picture would be constantly out of focus regardless of how much the position of the screen was adjusted. If the lens barrel carrier is out of line, thus throwing the parallel plane of the lens out of line with the screen, this condition would exist.

It also may be that one film track is so badly worn it permits the firm to ride out of parallel with the parallel plane of the lens. This need only be a ten-thousandth of an inch to create an out-of-focus effect on one side.

It is assumed that the projectionists in this theatre have rotated their present lenses; if so, there is nothing wrong with the lenses. The fault, then, is likely to lie in the line-up of the lens parallel plane of the film, or the plane of the screen.

It is highly improbable that one type of lens would create this condition, yet another lens eliminate it. It was found that in using one make of lens the overall illumination was poor by comparison with the treated lens, enough so that the out-of-focus effect noted when using the coated lens was washed out and unnoticeable. Has anyone else had such trouble for which another solution was found? If so, let's hear it.

The Source and Value of A Projector Parts Chart

A LETTER from Private L. Morris, Battery 1—4th C.A., Fort Amador, Canal Zone, stating that he has just received a copy of the Bluebook of Projection, adds that he would be helped considerably if a complete chart of a projector with all parts named had been included.

I assume Private Morris is one of those young men called to arms who have been assigned to operate the projection equipment in a camp theatre, even though he has had little or no experience in projection. I commend him for his deisre to learn and would like to help him; however, projection is nothing to be learned in a night, or a week, or even a year. There are enough of our young projectionists, surely, who are already in service who could and should be given that work.

The memorization of the parts of a projector would be of little help. If my books are studied, enough charts will be found to enable the student to learn various names, as he goes along and in this way he will find it much easier. Projector Manufacturers' instruction books name the parts.

to rebuild the toilet facilities in a more advantageous loaction, it would be reasonable to claim that the item comes largely under maintenance and repair rather than under a new improvement.

Since the safety and the health of the public is involved in the operation of motion picture theatres, it is very likely that a liberal attitude will be taken by the authorities in allowing a reasonable amount of remodeling work. The only type of work which would be frowned upon would consist in providing for enlarged capacities or creating unnecessary surface ornamentations requiring priority materials.

The one big mistake would be to assume that the new restrictions on construction make it necessary to allow continued deterioration of facilities and of the property.

paint should be used in large glass areas exposed to the sun rays. Areas of ordinary glass more than 4 feet square should seldom be painted black if other means may be used for "blacking-out."

An effective way of giving reasonable protection to the store front windows at the entrance to the theatre, is to back up the display spaces with substantial and well braced wooden paneling. When greater protection or transparency is desired for the store area, a well framed and supported wall of structural glass block or brick can be erected. A small wooden access door can be provided in this wall for reaching the display areas, but it should be kept closed tight when not in use.

Boarding on one side of the glass only gives little or no protection against scattering of glass fragments on the opposite side. When glass breaks under a severe blast, pieces may be scattered violently, although it is impossible to predict whether they will fly inward or outward. The glass in the lobby doors, even mirrors in rest rooms, are almost as liable to fracture and dangerous scattering as glass in the vestibule doors, display cases, store fronts, etc.; however, plate glass in the doors and in any sliding or hinged windows of display cases is somewhat less vulnerable than in fixed areas, provided the doors or windows allow some degree of free movement. In the case of an air-raid, it is best to fasten all doors, whether they have glass or not, so that they will remain wide open; also, open any windows, including any in the projection room. However, if the projection room windows are of the double hung type, they should never be fully opened so that they completely cover each other, but raised only so that approximately two-thirds of either section is covered by the other. With a double glazed installation, the inside glass might be blown into the room, scattering the fragments in all directions; however, this applies only if ordinary plate glass is used, not when tempered, laminated safety glass, or even wire glass is installed in both window lights.

Revised Listings of The Buyers Index, Naming Manufacturers of Theatre Equipment, Furnishings and Supplies by Product Classification, and Territorial Supply Dealers by States

THE listings of manufacturers beginning on this page, and of territorial dealers on pages 39, 40, 41 and 42, are offered at this time as a wartime adaptation of The Buyers Index published each year in a Spring Buyers Number of Better Theatres. Government restrictions on manufacturing and purchasing make it necessary to withdraw the regular Buyers Index probably for the duration of the war, at least until conditions in the theatre supply market are less uncertain. Increasing shortages, expanding diversion of plant facilities to war production, tightening of restrictions on civilian use of certain materials make it impossible to indicate what will be obtainable in a day, a week or a month. For such information the exhibitor must check, as his needs arise, with a territorial dealer or the manufacturer.

BLACKOUT-AIR RAID EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLIES

THE WAR has grouped familiar and strange products in a class of equipment, materials and accessories useful or needed for the protection, first of theatre patrons, and secondly, of theatre properties themselves. A list of such supplies includes:

Blackout window coverings , blackout lamps (coated bulbs directing a little light downward), blankets to be kept wet and thrown over ignited clothing, etc., bags for holding sand, buckets for sand or water, cots, emergency lighting equipment (both portable and stationary kinds), flashlights, asbestos gloves, helmets, two-way house phone systems, blackout paint (both self-glowing and ultraviolet-actuated), pails, black fire-resistant roof covering, stretchers, long-handled shovels, stirrup pumps for fighting incendiary bombs, self-luminous buttons and signs.

The most likely and convenient source of all blackout and air raid supplies is the local supply dealer, who has added products of this kind to his line according to the precautionary measures advised locally; and he also offers the advantage of having, with respect to many items, stocks or samples on hand.

Some items, like long-handled shovels, pails, blackout fabric, etc., are of course procurable at hardware and department stores in cities having no theatre supply dealer. Several types of stirrup pumps are now available in the United States, obtainable from or through theatre supply dealers and also hardware and department stores. Included in the blackout and air raid supplies added to the maintenance supply line of State Sanitary Products, 630 Ninth Avenue, is a stirrup pump designed after one generally used in England. For certain items that may not be locally or territorially obtainable, inquiry can be made of the manufacturer as to a local distributor or for direct purchase.

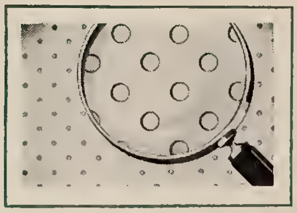
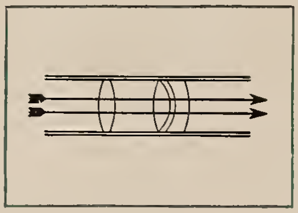
New RCA SNOWHITE SCREEN and RCA MAGICOTE LENS SERVICE give you whiter, more brilliant light with less amperage!

Carbons and power must be carefully conserved during this war period—and the RCA Manufacturing Co. offers you two splendid ways to conserve the light you need and give you better projection results.



Way number one, is the new Snowhite Screen that reflects brilliant white light without discrimination—as much as 85% of all the light projected. Controlled diffusion has been engineered right into the screen. And because the screens are scientifically perforated with an 8% open area, sound transmission is well above SMPE standards.



Second way to conserve light is with the RCA Magicote Lens Service. An extremely durable, transparent material developed by RCA is put on your projection lenses—with magic results. Now additional light, formerly lost by lens reflection, is directed onto the screen where it belongs. The result: greater picture brilliance and contrast.

Ask your RCA Theatre Supply Dealer for complete information about these two magic ways to conserve projection light. Or write RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Camden, N.J.

An Open Letter to Exhibitors:

When I saw the rough cut of MY GAL SAL at the Studio last February, I felt we had a great musical picture.

What I felt about the picture then, has more than justified itself in the results which we are witnessing today. It opened in New York last Thursday. Since then the business has been nothing short of tremendous.

Since opening, the Roxy has had the biggest business it has had in the past year -- bigger than A YANK IN THE R.A.F., bigger than TO THE SHORES OF TRIPOLI, SON OF FURY and all the others. There is every indication that all box-office records at the Roxy will be broken this week.

The critics agree with the public that this is a great picture. Unanimously, they all call it "the best musical of the year".

This great showmanship picture, which unquestionably is what the public wants and which is the finest example of "escapist" and morale-lifting entertainment, deserves the special attention of every showman and special plans for long runs.

Twentieth Century-Fox has been fortunate in offering to you this year some of your greatest hits. I sincerely believe that MY GAL SAL is going to top them all.

SELLING PLANS

THAT unending war of buyer and seller in the distribution of motion pictures is about to enter a new phase, with new tactics. At the moment the United Motion Picture Industry plan for selling in blocks-of-twelve comes to victory by the approval of exhibitor organizations, 49 to 8.

Able showmen representing the divergent interests have arrived at this decision after much conference, debate, travail. It is felt that they have done their combined best, for themselves and their industry.

The inevitable compromise nature of the elected plan of selling blocks-of-twelve to replace the Consent Decree's blocks-of-five, if, when and as approved by the Department of Justice, is apparent. It is an endeavour to replace the generally unsatisfactory blocks-of-five with a pattern between that scheme and the prior season's-product selling, which in turn was closely akin to the ancient "program" selling.

Obviously the proponents of the blocks-of-twelve plan, with the weight of so large a majority of the parties at interest behind it, have expectation that it will meet Federal approval. Gaining that procedure, the plan will go into trial by application, probably in September, in the midst of what used to be a selling season. Until then the existing order must apply.

Meanwhile, the score of 49 to 8 is a victory without peace.

THE militant minority views the blocks-of-twelve plan, and what goes with it, as a device for forcing product, regardless of merit. That minority, citing experiences before, expresses no enthusiasm for what it might do before the Department of Justice now, and contemplates other militant action. Most conspicuously there is promise of recourse to state legislations and the establishment of the autonomy of intrastate exhibition.

It is to be noted that expressions on this prospective plan of opposition come from Mr. R. B. Wilby of Atlanta, with operations extending into several southern states, militant and politically conscious, and in a region where "state's rights" pertain to principles never forgotten.

The trend today and in a wartime world is in a directly opposite direction. Today's legislations tend to the subordination of state lines in a nation dedicated to national effort.

Now, and maybe forever, the national government has at least a finger on and in the affairs of the motion picture.

And so again, now, the title and terms of the Neely Bill are being discussed again, and by factors of influence which in an earlier day would brook no tolerance for the idea of Federal regulation. It is pointed out by such observers that the Consent Decree has been in itself a sort of legislation, and that Congressional legislation is quite as much indicated.

NOW, for the second time, too, a voice from Production and Hollywood is raised in this issue. It is the vigorous voice of Mr. Samuel Goldwyn. The other day Mr. Goldwyn took his positive pen in hand and wrote a letter to the New York Times, and the whole world, too, saying: "Actually, the plan to nullify the Consent Decree . . . constitutes a long step backwards toward the shooting gallery days of the movies. . . . If the Justice Department approves . . . modification of the Consent Decree, the theatregoer may expect a decided increase in 'B' pictures, which have been gradually decreasing in number under the decree. Of my own knowledge, I can say that production executives of most major companies do not want to see the plan adopted. . . . The majority of exhibitors seem to feel that they can get films cheaper if they buy them fifty at a time. The thing they forget is that good pictures are made individually, not en masse, and they cannot be sold like sardines, one like another in a can that has not been opened. . . . Hollywood is anxious to make fewer and better pictures. . . . The producer has a right to expect the exhibitor to devote as much energy and thought to selling them to the public as he, the producer, does to making them."

The big, broad problem is, obviously, in the endeavour to write a blanket trade practice prescription for fifteen thousand theatres and the several thousand showmen who run them.

There is a substantial body of opinion among showmen that the service of all interests and the ultimate practicality would be served were it possible to offer all pictures, after completion and presentation at trade shows, one by one, to be bought one by one or in any number that might be agreed upon by buyer and seller. That is, in this stage of development, rather remote.

Meanwhile, there is that about the national scene which does make this a time for unity, or so much of it as may be had—not a time, assuredly, for public ordeals of controversy in industry affairs—especially if they must involve a government which has a war to win.

Further trial by experience, and by the industry's devices of self-regulation, so far as they avail, is indicated, and with it further aplication of the over-all designs and spirit of the movement for unity.

THAT battle of the stars—those star ratings of the pictures by New York picture critics for the newspapers—is on again, with fulminations in print.

All of a sudden Loew's theatre advertising in the dailies for the first time appeared with decorative and marginal reference to star ratings.

For a couple of years or more there has been an alleged agreement among the publicity and advertising representatives of the organized industry, meaning the members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to the effect that star ratings by newspaper critics would not be promoted and presented. The judgment seemed to be that such ratings delivered the fate of the product, in some measurable degree, over to the perhaps arbitrary judgments of the reviewers.

Sporadically, and most always with an "Excuse it, please—

Only $5,000 for Sets

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

SETS FOR future motion pictures will be simple and inexpensive, under plans of the War Production Board to restrict studio building, it was learned this week. A $5,000 price ceiling has been established on the new materials which may be purchased to build scenery for each picture. It is estimated that construction costs of set range between $10,000 and $150,000 per film.

Within the next few days, it was said, the board will issue an order imposing a limit on the amount of money which can be spent by producers on their sets, similar to the restrictions in the construction order issued April 9th under which non-essential residential, commercial, industrial and utility building were eliminated for the duration.

Hollywood executives were advised of the limit by wire on Tuesday from the WPB's Director of Industry Operations, J. S. Knowlson. It was in answer to a request for an interpretation of the general WPB restriction order of April 9th, which limited all new building to $5,000. Scenery construction on several lots for pictures now in work had ben held up pending interpretation.

Studios under the ruling may proceed without restriction in building sets with materials which they have on hand, or may reclaim.

The order applies only to the actual cost of new materials and does not include delivery charges, labor, or incidentals. Boss carpenters and studio managers are free to use their ingenuity in combining old materials with new or refurbishing existing scenery.

Board officials explained that materials, equipment and labor needed for the war effort were used in the building of sets just as they were in other construction. However, it was said, it was recognized that sets were essential to the production of motion pictures and, since films were considered essential in the war effort, their construction would be limited but not stopped.

Under plans being considered, the amount which may be expended on the construction of each set will be specified and more expensive scenes will have to secure approval of the board.

There were indications that with a limitation on sets, the board would take no further steps immediately to enforce conservation in the production of pictures but would leave it to the industry itself to go the limit in that direction. A plan for voluntary conservation was submitted by industry leaders to the WPB last month. Within a few days, the WPB is expected to announce acceptance of this plan and may also publish orders restricting the use of materials in theatres.

President high—69.5

THE PRESIDENT still outdraws 'em all. That is, he holds his lead over all mediums of informing and amusing the public, when he speaks over the radio.

The Cooperative Analysis of Broadcasting so stated this week, in rating radio program audiences during April. It said that Mr. Roosevelt's April 28th speech—a report on the war—rated 69.5 per cent.

That percentage of radio set owners interviewed, listened. It represents double the number of his peacetime listeners.

No Taxfree Fun?

TREASURY tax experts have not finished with the amusement industry. A general amusement tax is in the offing, to supplement the present federal levy on admissions, it was indicated by the utterances of Treasury Department spokesmen at Washington on Monday.

A new bill is reportedly in planning stages to tax the sizeable entertainment grosses of many amusements competitive to theatres, not now paying an admissions tax. Bowling alleys, parks, pool halls and other amusement would be reached by the proposed plan. The Treasury is said to feel that the flat tax of $10 a year on each bowling alley is not sufficient.

Members of the House Ways and Means Committee, which is preparing the new wartime tax program have expressed the off-the-record opinion that the theatre industry is now bearing a fair share of its tax burden, and that other amusements should also contribute.

it's all a mistake", star ratings have appeared in picture advertising and lobby displays by various companies.

The current upsurgence appears to have come from the fact that conspicuous presentation of a four star rating has appeared in the Globe theatre's advertising of "The Gold Rush", an ably retreaded and sound tracked revival by Charles Chaplin. The advertiser is, of course, the exhibitor, Mr. Harry Brandt, who is not bound by nor a party to the MPPDA press agents' pact.

All this has tossed the old issue into the councils of the eastern branch of the Publicity Directors Committee. They have sent a letter to Mr. Brandt, and the subject is on the docket for the next meeting. Presumably there will be new affirmations.

It does continue to be true, as this page has so often and so vigorously asserted, that the motion picture does better when the customers are permitted to make up their own minds.

Also, it is interesting to consider that the newspaper which originated the star rating system, the Chicago Tribune, after due discussion with exhibition interests, discontinued it. But, meanwhile, it has come to New York with the Tribune's offspring, the Daily News, and Liberty Magazine, where it survives.

Gone with the Deal

LONDON film circles were startled Wednesday by an official announcement that Gaumont British's deal with Metro for the exhibition of "Gone With the Wind" had been abandoned. A new contract has been negotiated with Associated British Circuit to show "GWTW" throughout the entire circuit, Max Milder, circuit chief said.

Independents have recently leveled caustic criticism against Gaumont British for its action in closing with Metro for "Gone With the Wind" breaking away from a solid bloc against special rental terms, advanced admission prices and other conditions appended to the contract.

The announcement was described as creating a major sensation in London trade circles. The Associated British circuit, in which Warner Brothers recently acquired substantial interests, numbers 450 more theatres than Gaumont.

Higher Brackets

GINGER Rogers and Tyrone Power, employees of Twentieth Century-Fox, earned more in salaries than any officers except Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production, the company's annual report, filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, states. Covering the fiscal year ended December 27th last, the figures are: Mr. Zanuck, $260,000; Miss Rogers, $215,000; Mr. Power, $188,125. The year previous, Mr. Zanuck received $265,000; Henry Fonda, $172,208; Mr. Power, $169,009.

Warners Checking

WARNER BROTHERS has re-established its own theatre box-office checking service, under Rudy Hagen, of the home office sales division. Reasons given were the desire to allow the company more direct contact with the checkers of its films, and to assure closer control over checking in the growing trend of percentage selling. Warners had originally checked their own pictures, up to 18 months ago, when they employed a national checking service. The checkers will report to the branch managers.

Control in Canada

DOUBLE BILLS, chance games, giveaways and all theatre contests and premiums face curtailment in Canada, it was disclosed Tuesday following a meeting of the advisory council of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

Orders abolishing double bills are being held in abeyance, it was indicated, pending a stabilization of the prices of films exported from the United States. R. G. McMullen, Board administrator of theatres and films, announced an embargo on all further contracts for chance games, giveaways and premiums. Present arrangements for such inducements cannot be renewed, effective May 1st.

Facing the possibility of increasing prices in films from the United States and with a possible print shortage through the restriction of cellulose supplies for film, Canada is studying an official cut in the number of prints in circulation in the Dominion. This would also bar double features, it was said.

Theatres were also directed to designate the number of days during the year on which advanced holiday prices prevail. Religious feast days are excluded.

Mr. McMullen said summer theatres would be permitted to reopen where they did not duplicate existing film service. Theatres next autumn will be required to run shorter programs to conserve power and unprofitable operations may be eliminated. Exhibitors in Canada were also told they must continue to do business with exchanges where they bought film during the basic period from September 15th to October 11th last. This freezing of contract conditions was described as working both ways, requiring exchanges to continue service to exhibitors.

Information Please

NEWEST nominee to head the long promised but yet evanescent coordinated U. S. Government wartime information and press relations agency is Lowell Mellett, currently the Coordinator of Government Films and head of the Office of Government Reports. So reported a Washington dispatch last Saturday to the New York Herald Tribune.

Last week, at Washington, Mr. Mellett opened a super information booth in the center of Pennsylvania Avenue to tell harried business men where to find what in the capital. He denied that the information center had cost half a million dollars, or was the "madhouse" which some press accounts charged.

It is the place to go to find out the right telephone numbers, departments, Senators, generals, or crop control experts, the U. S. Information Service told Washington visitors.

RCA Offers Patents

THE Radio Corporation of America will not lag behind other large corporations in making its patents accessible to producers of war material. So said David Sarnoff, president, at the annual stockholders' meeting in New York City, Tuesday.

He said the company had assured the Government of cooperation and added that his firm had issued licenses to more than 150 manufacturers, approximately 80 of whom are actual or potential sources of war material.

Last week, William H. Bauer, attorney for the Federal Communications Commission, told the Senate Patents Committee, in Washington, that film sound system patents were facets of an international agreement by which the Bell Telephone System, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and the Radio Corporation of America hoped to control communications.

Global Backgrounds

WAR films henceforth will have the "global characteristic" which distinguishes the present United Nations conflict with the Axis from World War I, under a plan advanced by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at Hollywood this week.

International background footage will be gathered in a common pool by the Academy for use by all studios. Footage related to the war on its many fronts will be gathered from official Government film agencies and other sources.

Walter Wanger, president of the Academy, concluded an agreement this week with Thomas Baird, of the British Ministry of Information and Eric Cleough, British consul at Los Angeles to make available to American producers all war stock shots now in British archives. All American footage is reciprocally provided for British use.

Similar arrangements are pending with U. S. film agencies and the Canadian Film Ministry.

Product Shortage

A LACK of "A" pictures may force the Ambassador, large St. Louis first-run theatre to close, according to Edward C. Arthur, assistant general manager of Fanchon and Marco, operators. He said Monday approximately 500 employees had received discharge notices, contingent upon films' availability. The theatre seats 3,154 in St. Louis' downtown, and is the F. and M.'s competition to Loew's there. It plays all product except Loews' and United Artists'. He and other circuit executives had viewed pictures for a week, and were unable to select one to follow "My Gal Sal," its current feature, Mr. Arthur asserted.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

April 30, 1942

Mr. Terry Ramsaye

Dear Mr. Ramsaye:

The Quigley Award for War Showmanship should prove a highly useful stimulus for mobilizing the industry behind our war effort. A visual presentation of what this war means to us today, and in the future, is a vital step in creating an alert and informed public.

A special citation for War Showmanship should be a highly coveted award, but the final award will be the satisfaction of having made a definite contribution toward victory.

Sincerely,

William J. Donovan

THE QUIGLEY AWARD for War Showmanship, announced last month, has won wide endorsement from Government and industry leaders. Above is a letter from the U. S. Coordinator of Information. In the Managers' Round Table section, on page 59, are others.

MINORITY BLOC OPPOSES SALES PLAN AS 'FORCING'

Wilby, Opposition Leader, Concedes Approval but Sees Overselling Ahead

Although 49 out of 56 exhibitor organizations have voted approval of the blocks-of-twelve sales plan proposed by the United Motion Picture Industry as the best present substitute for the blocks-of-five selling system of the consent decree it still faces a decided bloc of exhibitor opposition.

"Worse than ever" is the way Robert Wilby, head of the Wilby and Kincey circuit of Atlanta, Ga., a Paramount partner, described the new selling formula in New York last week.

Exhibitors in the Southeast, and in many other sections of the country are decidedly dissatisfied with the formula reached by the all-industry unity conferences, he indicated. It means, Mr. Wilby declared, a degree of product forcing hitherto unequalled under any system of selling. He predicted state legislation drives against block booking.

He conceded that the plan, which now has a clear majority vote of approval, and the backing of both national Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, would probably be adopted. But this will by no means halt exhibitor objections, or suspend their efforts to prevent overselling of product, Mr. Wilby declared.

Ready for Government Approval

The majority of exhibitors meanwhile have cleared the way for the five consenting distributors, participant in the UMPI movement, to take the unity movement's blocks-of-12 proposal to the Department of Justice and federal courts for official sanction. If this is forthcoming it will become the new order of selling, under the consent decree, beginning with the new season on September 1st.

National Allied, by action of its board of directors in Chicago on Thursday approved the UMPI sales plant. See page 14. Only one of the 18 Allied units, the New England Independent Exhibitors, Inc., specifically rejected the plan. MPTOA units approved it 21 to 3 and 11 unaffiliated exhibitor groups pledged support. Three units of the 57 on the official UMPI participation list had not been heard from.

The trade practices committee of UMPI, which drafted the sales formula, was called back into session for Tuesday, May 12, at 10 AM in the Hotel Warwick, New York City, by its chairman, Jack Kirsch, of Illinois Allied. It will receive an official report on how the exhibitor organizations voted.

On Wednesday, May 13th, the UMPI committee of the whole will meet at the Warwick to take final action on the trade practices proposal. William F. Rodgers, of MGM, the chairman, summoned members on Monday. It is expected to accept the selling plan verbatim from the trade practices committee and to work out and formally state recommendations for conciliation of regional and individual disputes, the prevention of short subject forcing, and improving arbitration. These questions constitute the remaining four points of the trade practice program outlined by the first UMPI meeting at Chicago, last December 9th.

The committee of the whole is expected to spend some time on the conciliation, shorts subject and arbitration measures and it was considered possible that the New York session might last for several days. The committee will name a delegation to present the UMPI plan to the Department of Justice, and thence to the New York District Federal Court, for incorporation into the consent decree.

Warns on Possible State Legislation

State legislation may yet be sought on a widespread scale by exhibitors to outlaw all block selling, Mr. Wilby warned. He cited action by the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association, condemning the plan and appointing a committee to study legislative action against it.

The New England Independent Exhibitors, Inc., an Allied unit, and the North and South Carolina Theatre Owners (MPTO) have taken similar stands. Mr. Wilby also said that he had heard many complaints against the blocks-of-12 formula from independents, circuit operators and trade association leaders.

Chief objection to the unity proposal appears to center in areas where single feature operators predominate. Exhibitors fear that the new plan will force them to buy unwanted product, en masse, without their previous formal or informal cancellation opportunity. It is also being asserted widely by exhibitors that the decree's blocks-of-five has increased the price of pictures. They fear that quarterly blocks of a dozen pictures will mean even more high priced specials, and high percentage designations.

Asserts 'Old System Better'

This question of rising film rentals, and how to prevent them, occupied a major portion of the Allied directors session called to act on the UMPI plan at Chicago last week.

"The old system of yearly sales, for all its evils, was better than blocks-of-twelve," Mr. Wilby remarked. "It was possible to wash-out a certain portion of the product," he said. Under the decree, or this new plan, there appears to be no choice but to take the entire blocks of all five consenting companies, to secure the one or two good pictures in each, he indicated. "We just can't use that much product," he added.

"If there are two bad pictures in a block-of-five, distributors can force them with the remaining three," he commented. "Selling blocks-of-12, the two bad pictures can be forced with ten others."

The problem is particularly acute for the small town, single feature theatre, Mr. Wilby asserted. To buy all the blocks of 12 of all five distributors, plus product from the "little three," he declared, would mean an impossible number of pictures for the average available screen time.

"Any exhibitor would rather play a good picture of another company than a bad one out of a block-of-12," Mr. Wilby asserted. He warned of possible state action to prevent excessive forcing by block sales.

Studing Anti-Block Laws

In Georgia and Alabama, he reported, the Southeastern Theatre Owners, have already started action looking towards a state anti-block booking law. The legislative committee of the SETOA is studying a law to prohibit the conditioning of the sale of one motion picture on the sale of another. It would, according to Mr. Wilby, retain many of the features of the Neely bill.

The UMPI plan "undoubtedly" will be adopted by the industry generally and approved by the government in time for the start of the 1942-43 season in September, according to Mr. Wilby. He said that he doubted exhibitors would go directly to the Department of Justice, or to Judge Henry Goddard, who signed the decree.

"We went there before and got nothing," he commented.

HIGH RENTALS MENACE TO HARMONY, ALLIED WARNS

Directors Approve UMPI Sales Plan, Formulate Conciliation Proposal

High film rentals and a present trend toward classification of many more pictures in the higher percentage brackets are called a menace to intra-industry harmony in a warning issued by the board of directors of Allied States Association which, it was emphasized by title and documentation, was intended as more than the customary complaint of exhibitors on the subject.

The board, at a meeting in Chicago last week which Abram F. Myers, chairman, described as the most memorable in the organization's history, approved the selling plan proposed by the United Motion Picture Industry; voted against holding a national convention this year; and formulated a proposal for a workable conciliation plan. The session, originally scheduled for Thursday, April 30th, lasted well into the night and was continued for part of the next day.

The "solemn warning" on film rentals was "for the special consideration" of UMPI and of the companies not cooperating in that group. It declared the trend was especially dangerous now because admission prices are frozen in practice even though not by order, and it cited figures to show rapidly increasing distributor earnings.

Exhibitors Can Pay Taxes 'Directly'

Answering the possible argument that these corporate earnings as well as individual salaries and bonuses are greatly reduced by high taxes the board observed: "The Government has not appointed these interests to be official tax collectors. . . . Exhibitors are entitled to the privilege of paying their taxes directly."

Supporting their statement that film rentals were exorbitant, a series of published financial statements of six major producers was used showing that, according to published figures, the companies had made more profit in 1941 than they had made in a long time. Comparing the figures with those of 1939, when the foreign market was being lost, and those of today, there is a profit increase of approximately $20,000,000 between the companies mentioned, all of which Allied says, came from American rentals, insomuch as there is no foreign market to speak of.

The meeting opened with a full report by the UMPI Committee, who, besides reporting on the selling plans previously agreed upon, also covered several points not yet ready for final action. The board approved, in principle, the tentative agreements arrived on these points, which were: the forcing of shorts; investigation of territorial complaints, and conciliation of individual grievances.

On the matter of territorial complaints, the plan is, that if a territorial disagreement of a substantial nature should arise, a fact-finding committee consisting of an independent exhibitor, a distributor representative, and a theatre circuit representative, would be appointed by William F. Rodgers, UMPI chairman, and Jack Kirsch, trade practice committee chairman, to investigate.

Procedures Outlined for Conciliation Plan

The board, feeling that many grievances could be settled outside of the arbitration system, gave much thought to a conciliation plan. Five tentative procedures were advanced toward the working out of such a plan. First, that the parties should try to iron out the differences themselves. Failing, the problem would then be submitted to a group composed of the exhibitor, a representative of the regional exhibitor association and the exchange's branch manager. This failing, it is to be submitted to the exhibitor, the exhibitor organization and the distributor's New York office. Still failing, it would then be submitted to the exhibitor association, the distributor's New York office and the secretary of UMPI. As a last resort the problem would go to the UMPI general committee. It was generally thought if the plan is adopted that such conciliation would not have to go beyond three points.

Mr. Meyers was instructed, as Chairman of Allied, to write to William F. Rogers, UMPI chairman, asking that UMPI, as the most representative group for such a task, try to work some order out of the present chaos of conflicting and over-lapping efforts of all kinds in the industry. Particularly stressed were the numerous war and charity campaign committees.

Colonel H. A. Cole, H. H. Lowenstein and Sidney E. Samuelson were appointed a committee to confer with Deems Taylor, new head of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, regarding a revised schedule of music rates.

Mr. Myers went to Chicago direct from Canada where he had studied the Canadian price control as it affects film rentals and admission. He reviewed the plan at the meeting but no formal recommendations were made.

It was voted to continue the present UMPI Committee, consisting of Col. Cole, Jack Kirsch, Martin Smith and Sidney E. Samuelson, until next January. Beginning then, and every January thereafter, there are to be two vacancies on this committee, which will be filled by the Board.

No Convention This Year

The Board definitely decided against a national convention this year, because of transportation problems brought on by the war.

The meeting, which was presided over by Abram F. Meyers, and held in the English Walnut Room of the Congress Hotel, was attended by: Nathan Yamins and E. H. Stoneman, Massachusetts; Maxwell Alderman, Connecticut; H. M. Lowenstein, New Jersey; E. L. Peaslee, Minnesota; Ray Branch, Michigan; Sidney E. Samuelson, Eastern Pennsylvania; Meyer Leventhal, Maryland; M. A. Rosenberg, Western Pennsylvania; Martin Smith, Pete Wood and Max Stearn, Ohio; Don R. Rossiter and Roy E. Harrold, Indiana; Jack Kirsch, Illinois; and William Ainsworth, A. C. Berkholtz, George Fischer, A. C. Gutenberg, F. J. McWilliams, William Smith, Harry Perlewitz and John P. Adler, all of Wisconsin.

Text of Allied's 'Solemn Warning'

Following is the full text of the statement issued last week by Allied States Association directors on present film rentals. The statement was submitted to the United Motion Picture Industry and to the distributors not cooperating in that unit.

So numerous and insistent have become the complaints and protests of independent exhibitors in all parts of the country concerning greatly increased film rentals in recent years, and especially for the 1941-1942 product, that the Board of Directors finds it necessary to issue a solemn warning on the subject in the hope that the distributors will heed it and thus avert the measures destructive of industrial unity which the exhibitors are demanding and will insist upon if relief is not promptly forthcoming.

Allied has just re-affirmed its allegiance to the principles of the unity movement which it sponsored and the Board of Directors is anxious that the United Motion Picture Industry shall function efficiently and effectively to insure unity at least for the duration of the war, if not permanently. Therefore, the Board of Directors submits this statement for the special consideration of U.M.P.I., through which the organized exhibitors of the United States are cooperating with the five consenting distributors. As regards the remaining distributors, this statement is submitted for their respective individual consideration.

Complaints Warranted

Film rentals based on 40% of the gross receipts, initiated for a few outstanding productions released as specials, have become so common that virtually all distributors now demand that figure for all above the run-of-mine pictures conforming to the classification B. Pictures of current or topical interest, including patriotic and morale building subjects, now are being offered at 50% of the gross. Not only has the percentage figure gradually climbed in recent years, but the proportion of percentage pictures to flat rentals has greatly increased.

The complaint this season not only is that the top figure on individual pictures is still on the rise but particularly that the number of pictures in the top bracket has greatly increased. Consenting distributors by inserting one or more top pictures in each block of five already have, at least several of them, allocated more pictures to the top bracket than during the whole of last year—and the season still has four months to go. The non-consenting distributors, taking advantage of the desire of the exhibitors to secure a back-log of product by buying some on a yearly basis, have followed the lead of the consenting companies in greatly increasing the number of percentage pictures.

Text of Allied's 'Warning' On High Rentals, Percentages

The Board insists that this is not the customary squawk of exhibitors concerning film rentals and should not be dismissed as such. The position of the independent exhibitors in many situations is being adversely affected by other factors in addition to high rentals. Many exhibitors, particularly in small towns, are being affected by shifts in population. Others, particularly those drawing their trade from a distance, are being affected by the tire shortage and their condition will become acute when gas rationing goes into effect. Even in the industrial centers business is disturbed by many new factors, including the around-the-clock operation of factories and the growing competition of rival amusements and dimout regulations.

With their operating costs and the cost of living on the upgrade, the exhibitors find that as a practical matter their admission prices are frozen and no relief can be obtained by increasing prices. With a ceiling placed by the Government on virtually all items on the family budget, the theatres cannot now raise prices without creating resentment on the ground that, whatever may be their legal rights, they are out of step with the Government's policy as explained by the President and consequently handicapping the war effort.

Evidence of Inflation

Even a casual reader of the trade papers must be impressed that despite the supposed shrinkage of the foreign market the earnings of the major companies this year are breaking their all time records.

Attached hereto is a tabulated statement compiled from published statements, which are the only figures available to us at this time. We can only assume that they are accurate, otherwise they would not have been released to the trade press.

In the interest of fairness it should be pointed out that the 1939 gross income obviously includes a substantial amount derived from the foreign market which plays a minor part in the figures for 1941, thus emphasizing the tremendous increase in film rentals paid by American exhibitors, which more than offset the foreign losses.

The claims put forward in justification of the increased film rentals to the effect that production and distribution costs have sky-rocketed, are utterly exploded by the attached statement which shows that between 1939 and 1941 the combined operating expenses of the six companies mentioned declined approximately $15,000,000.

The astonishing fact disclosed by the tabulation is that despite all claims of foreign losses and of increased operating expense the combined operating profit of the companies in question increased from $41,365,441 in 1939 to $61,531,309 in 1941—approximately $20,000,000.

As regards the claim offered by the producer-distributors in justification of their huge corporate earnings and individual salaries and bonuses that the same are greatly reduced by reason of the high taxes they must pay, the Board observes that the Government has not appointed these interests to be official tax collectors and that the exhibitors are entitled to the privilege of paying their taxes directly and thus sharing in one of the important privileges of citizenship.

Keeping the Powder Dry

The Board of Directors calls upon the producer-distributors to consider and act upon this statement in the spirit of unity and cooperation in which it is issued and in the spirit of the recent utterances of the President of the United States. The demand for action by the exhibitors is such that neither the Allied leadership nor any other can quiet it if relief is not forthcoming. In response to the clamor for action Allied has inaugurated a preparedness campaign and is making a careful study of the steps taken in Canada with respect to film rentals and the effects thereof on both the exhibitors and the distributors. This is not cited as a threat but merely as an indication of the extent to which the pressure for action must necessarily affect existing satisfactory intra-industry relations if the problem of high film rentals cannot be solved in accordance with the principles sponsored by Allied.

Committee of Whole To Decide UMPI Budget

A permanent operating budget for the United Motion Picture Industry will be worked out by the Committee of the Whole when it meets in New York on Wednesday.

The finance comittee, meeting at New York last week, voted to defer action on a permanent operating budget, and means of financing the industry unity organization until the entire committee, representing all those who pay the bills, meets at New York. H. M. Richey, chairman of the finance committee, revealed that the members of his subcommittee felt that the decision on how much UMPI should cost, and how the money should be subscribed required action by the full group.

It was reported that a general assessment plan will be proposed, with consenting distributors paying equal shares and theatre associations subscribing proportionately to size and membership. One member estimated that the unity movement could be maintained in permanent headquarters, and meet all operating expenses for between $50,000 and $75,000 a year.

Activities of the War Activities Committee since Pearl Harbor were summarized Tuesday in a report to members of the committee's divisions by Francis S. Harmon, executive vice-chairman of the group. The message praised cooperation by all branches of the industry in the WAC program and expressed confidence that the industry would meet all future wartime demands tor its aid.

Officials of the War Production Board have recognized the essential character of the industry, Mr. Harmon said, and he predicted their approval of a voluntary conservation program to save critical materials in the industry, without seriously curtailing production. Individual priority requests, he said, probably will have to be handled by a full time Washington representative of the industry.

The WAC has completed its work in the priority field with the preparation of a report for the WPB on industry use of materials and the submission of a brief in behalf of the industry.

WAC Active for USO, War Relief, Bond Sales

Last week 13,950 theatres had submitted pledges of participation in the WAC distribution of free "Victory Films." Additional pledges were reported at mid-week. The report detailed bookings of 21 films handled by WAC. Also the WAC has sent 16 mm. prints of 161 features and 200 short subjects to the Army for free exhibition overseas.

Mr. Harmon reported full industry cooperation on campaigns in behalf of the USO, Army-Navy Relief, and for the sale of war bonds and stamps.

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, reported that since January 14, 1941, it had completed and delivered to the War Department 63 training films totaling 157 reels. Fourteen projects in production will total another 72-75 reels. This entire program has been conducted under the sponsorship of the industry's War Activities Committee.

Voluntary Trial On Priorities Seen

Priority discussions between the WPB and the producers and distributors at Washington last week were greatly aided by the comprehensive study of industry requirements made by Donald Hyndman, Eastman Kodak engineer on the War Activities Staff, Mr. Harmon said.

Those attending the meetings "came away with the distinct impression that responsible officers of the WPB, charged with handling this industry's problems, were firmly resolved to assist in finding practicable solutions, and were willing to let the industry during a six months trial period, demonstrate its own capacity for achieving through voluntary conservation a more substantial saving in critical materials than could be attained by a fixed percentage contained in a rigid limitation order," the report observed.

"All branches and all elements within the business are represented on the various divisions and subcommittees. More and more the war efforts of our entire industry are clearing through this office. It is important that every element within the industry feels that it is adequately represented on the WAC and efficiently served by it," Mr. Harmon declared.

20th—FOX SETS 52 FEATURES; BUDGET IS $28,000,000

Skouras, Goetz, Connors Announce Plans; Program Stresses Variety

War and priorities notwithstanding, Twentieth Century-Fox's budget for 1942-43 will reach an "all-time high" of $28,000,000, it was announced to the trade press, along with pertinent details, Tuesday afternoon at the New York home office.

The scene was the office of Spyros Skouras, new president, where he, William Goetz and Tom Connors were the participants in a three-pronged interview.

Mr. Goetz, vice-president in charge of studio operations, referred to previous estimates of the new Fox budget as "low," and raised the ante to $28,000,000. That is four million dollars more than last year's budget, which, however, was exceeded by an undisclosed amount, Mr. Goetz admitted.

The $28,000,000 is for 52 features, excluding print costs, short subjects, and Movietone News. Of the 52, 30 will be "A" pictures, Mr. Skouras said, in his first official remarks to the trade press since assuming the Fox presidency after the death of Sidney Kent. He noted that the current program had 24 in this classification. The company will not neglect the lower classification, he added; they will also have higher budgets.

The company is not stressing any "particular" type of entertainment in the new schedule, Mr. Skouras said, noting variety denoted by eight musicals, and some pictures for "national morale."

No Decision on Sales Convention

Whether Fox will hold an annual sales meeting, or regionals, and where, has not been decided, Tom Connors, vice-president in charge of sales, said. He hopes, however, to begin selling pictures in July or August; the time dependent upon disposition of the new consent decree sales plan, which, he reminded, was to be the subject of a United Motion Picture Industry conference next week, from where it would be referred to the Department of Justice. Regional meetings, or a national meeting, if held, would be in June or July, Mr. Connors added.

The military status of Lieutenant Colonel Darryl F. Zanuck, unavoidably absent from the interview (he was in Washington) brought from Mr. Goetz the remark that Mr. Zanuck's time in production, of which he has charge, would depend on governmental demands. Mr. Goetz indicated Fox expected "six to eight" pictures directly from Mr. Zanuck.

Of "big" pictures to match the current year's "A Yank in the R. A. F.," "How Green Was My Valley," "My Gal Sal," and others, Mr. Goetz asserted the new program would match these with "The Moon Is Down," for which Fox paid $300,000 and which Mr. Goetz called a "great piece of property"; "Crash Dive," "Thunder Bird" and "The Immortal Sergeant."

By Staff Photographer

Spyros Skouras, right, announces new season plans for Twentieth Century-Fox at the home office in New York. Watching, and participating in the interview, at left, are Tom Connors and William Goetz. Mr. Skouras was elected president of the company last month following the death of Sidney R. Kent, and after his election by the board, Mr. Connors was named vice-president in charge of sales. The announcement was the first statement on product plans to come from the new officers.

The eight color pictures scheduled are two more than in the current schedule, it was noted.

Production in England is exclusive of the program announced, Mr. Goetz declared, noting the near-completion of "The Young Mr. Pitt."

Mr. Skouras added that it had not been decided how many films would come from England.

War Affecting Production Plans

There will be the usual difficulties in casting, Mr. Goetz admitted, refusing, however, to admit these would be caused overmuch by the draft; so much, that is, that picture types would have to be changed.

Mr. Goetz added stars would come from the ranks. They would be actors and actresses now seen in supporting roles; and that among them there was much promise.

Fox cannot at present announce the titles of the first 12 films, under the new decree sales plan, Mr. Skouras and Mr. Connors agreed, adding, however, that most would be completed when time came to offer them.

The company's commitment of "victory" films from the suggestions made by Lowell Mellett, Coordinator of Government Films, is three at present, but may be changed, it was indicated.

Priorities are causing "inconveniences" at the studio, Mr. Goetz admitted, remarking, "Our boys are showing great ingenuity."

Anent the holding of a national convention, or regional meetings, Mr. Connors noted transportation problems and uncertainty over next governmental steps were factors.

The short subject budget has not been determined, but it definitely will be larger, it was assured.

Mr. Connors denied that short subjects manufacture would be shifted from New York to the Coast.

A foreign manager to replace the late Walter Hutchinson has been selected, but Fox is not ready to disclose his name, Mr. Skouras said.

Pictures on the new schedule so far are "Tales of Manhattan," completed and previewed, and starring Charles Boyer, Henry Fonda, Rita Hayworth, Charles Laughton, Edward Robinson, and others; "The Moon Is Down," from John Steinbeck's play; "Thunder Bird," with Gene Tierney, Jack Holt, and Preston Foster; "The Black Swan," with Tyrone Power, and Maureen O'Sullivan.

Other Fox officials at the interview were Harry Brand, confirmed this week by the company as continuing studio publicity chief; A. M. Botsford, who leaves advertising and publicity captaincy at the New York office to become distribution studio representative, and Felix Jenkins, general counsel.

Hal Horne New Advertising Head

Hal Horne this week became advertising and publicity director for Twentieth Century-Fox, working from the New York office of that company, and with the Hal Horne exploitation office in that city. He replaces A. M. Botsford, who was appointed by Spyros Skouras, Fox president, distribution representative at the studio, effective in June. Mr Horne's experience includes, briefly, publicity managership for the Boy Scouts of America; general managership of the Far West Theatre Circuit, Los Angeles; presidency of the Horne Theatre Circuit, San Francisco; advertising and publicity directorship for United Artists; vice-presidency of Walt Disney Productions, and presidency of Hal Horne Organization.

CONVENTION SEASON OPENS; NEW PRODUCT ANNOUNCED

Paramount Sales Executives Meet; Discuss New Season's Product

Convention time is here. New season product is being disclosed to sales executives and they, in turn, mull selling methods, new problems presented by the war, and the consent decree's probable transformation.

Paramount sales officials met Monday through Wednesday at Adolph Zukor's Mountain View Country Club, New City, New York. Producers Releasing Corporation held its annual convention Tuesday through Thursday, at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel, Hollywood. Universal announced it would hold its annual sales convention at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, June 2d through 5th. Republic set three regional sales meetings.

At Twentieth-Century Fox, Spyros Skouras, new president, told the trade press his company would spend $28,000,000 the coming season on approximately 52 pictures. And almost his first official act, disclosed Monday, was the appointment of Hal Horne to head the company's advertising and publicity, the transfer of A. M. Botsford from this post to that of special studio representative of distribution, and the confirmation of Harry Brand as studio director of advertising and publicity. The Skouras action Tuesday followed executive conferences in Washington attended by him, Tom Connors, Mr. Brand, Darryl M. Zanuck, and Mr. Botsford.

KORDA ACQUIRES BRITISH FILMS

Alexander Korda revealed during his report to United Artists stockholders in New York this week that he had acquired for UA distribution two outstanding British films, the first entitled "One of Our Aircraft is Missing," produced by Michael Powell, producer of "The Invaders." The second film is "In Which We Serve," currently being produced in England by Noel Coward. It had been reported recently that a number of major distributing companies had been angling for U.S. distribution of these two pictures.

Mr. Korda, according to United Artists, is leaving for Hollywood within the next two weeks in order to start production on his forthcoming program. He will have begun three by September 1st.

Product Listed by Paramount

Five regional sales meetings, for field sales staffs, will be held this month by Paramount, Neil Agnew, general sales manager, told the executive sales convention at New City, New York Monday. See picture on page 12.

The first will be held at the Hotel Pierre, New York, May 11 and 12, for the New York, Buffalo, Albany, New Haven and Boston exchanges, with J. J. Unger, Eastern division manager, presiding. Mr. Unger also will preside at the second meeting, to be held at the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, May 15 and 16, for the Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Detroit exchanges. Mr. Agnew, Charles M. Reagan, George Smith and Oscar Morgan will address the first meeting and Mr. Agnew and Mr. Reagan the second.

The third meeting will be held at the Peabody Hotel, Memphis, also on May 15 and 16. George Smith, Western division manager, will preside, and the personnel of the Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans, Oklahome City, Dallas and Memphis exchanges will be present.

On May 18 and 19, the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Denver, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Chicago exchanges will meet at the Muehlebach Hotel, Kansas City, with Smith presiding and Messrs. Agnew, Reagan and Morgan present.

The final meeting will be held May 22 and 23 at the Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco, with the personnel from that city, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle exchanges attending. Mr. Smith will preside and Mr. Reagan will be a speaker.

Mr. Agnew also said "Reap the Wild Wind" was to be played at increased admissions only because such a policy was proved wise by the results in eight prerelease dates. General release will be disclosed later, he added.

Sales conferences were held with Mr. Agnew and Charles Reagan, assistant sales manager, conducting the sessions. Product and general company affairs were discussed Tuesday by Barney Balaban, president; Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president and studio head; Mr. Zukor, R. M. Gillham, Oscar Morgan, Mr. Reagan, J. J. Unger and George Smith, Russel Holman, Eastern studio representative, and Jack Karp, studio legal advisor, attended the meeting.

Next Season's Schedule Outlined

On the final day of the Paramount sales meeting at Mountain View, N. Y., Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of production operations, described in detail the company's backlog of pictures and outlined schedules for next season.

Heading the list of completed pictures for the current season is "Wake Island," a factual story of the war in the Pacific. It will be released in the near future.

"For Whom the Bell Tolls," with Gary Cooper, under the direction of Sam Wood, will be Paramount's outstanding production effort for the new season, Mr. Freeman told the sales force. Its budget will be far in excess of anything produced by the company in more than a decade, he said.

Other completed product for the new season includes the Bob Hope-Bing Crosby-Dorothy Lamour comedy, "Road to Morocco"; "Forest Rangers," color production with Paulette Goddard and Fred MacMurray; Preston Sturges' "Palm Beach Story," starring Claudette Colbert, Joel McCrea, Mary Astor and Rudy Vallee; "I Married a Witch," Fredric March and Veronica Lake; "Silver Queen" with George Brent, Priscilla Lane and Bruce Cabot; and Preston Sturges' "Great Without Glory" starring Joel McCrea and Betty Field.

Increased Use Of Technicolor

Mr. Freeman also outlined casting and directorial assignments on "Lady in the Dark," "Let's Face It," "Frenchman's Creek," "Star Spangled Rhythm," "Happy Go Lucky," for the 1942-43 season. He stressed the increased use of color with five pictures—"For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Forest Rangers," "Frenchman's Creek," "Star Spangled Rhythm" and "Happy Go Lucky" slated for filming in Technicolor.

In addition Mr. Freeman announced the purchase Tuesday of Rachel Field's unpublished novel "And Now Tomorrow" and the acquisition of Franchot Tone as a Paramount star.

Oscar Morgan, head of the short subject department, said that to provide playing time for the Government's Victory Films, Paramount would reduce the number of its shorts for next season from 85 to 64.

Republic Sets Three Meetings

J. R. Grainger, Republic's general sales manager and M. J. Siegel, chief production executive, on Tuesday announced three regional sales meetings to start Republic's 1942-43 season.

They will be held at New York, May 12th and 13th at the New York Athletic Club; in Chicago, May 14 and 15, at the Drake Hotel; and in Los Angeles on May 19th and 20th at the Republic studios.

Republic will announce its most ambitious production program to date at these meetings, the executives said. All branch managers, sales personnel and Republic executives will be present.

The New York session will be attended by Mr. Siegel and William Saal from the studio and all home office executives. Branch managers and salesmen will come to New York from the Republic office in Albany, Washington, Boston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Atlanta, Philadelphia, Tampa, New Haven, Pittsburgh and Charlotte.

PRC to Have 18 Westerns and 24 Features

Producers Releasing Corporation sales executives were told at the annual convention, Tuesday through Thursday at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel, Hollywood, that the company had a minimum of 42 pictures scheduled for the 1942-43 season: 18 westerns, 24 features. Six of the latter will be "specials."

There will be an outstanding advertising campaign to cover the schedule, as well as an "all-out" sales drive.

Home office executives, producers and franchise holders representing twenty-nine exchanges attended the three days of conferences which wound up with a "Location Party" at Iverson Ranch, Chatsworth, where Sig Neufeld was shooting "Tumbleweed Trail," followed by a banquet in the evening at the P.R.C. Studios, Hollywood.

In opening the convention Tuesday, President O. Henry Briggs reviewed the progress of the company since its inception, and stressed that "P.R.C. is pledged to carry on the policy that has resulted in two years of building an international distributing organization of reputation and integrity in the film industry.

"In the first year of its existence, P.R.C. promised—and delivered—38 pictures. For 1941-42 we announced 42 productions, and to date we have delivered 100 per cent as per schedule.

"We shall continue to live up to that record," he asserted.

'Production Values' For the Exhibitor

Leon Fromkess, vice-president in charge of production, said: "We are going to get dollar-for-dollar in production values, and we are going to pass that value on to the exhibitor." He added every feature would have an outstanding "name" player.

Arthur Greenblatt, general sales manager, who presided at all sessions, said an intensive sales drive, coordinated with a national sales campaign will immediately follow issuance of the detailed announcement of the 1942-43 program in the year book, to be distributed about July 1st. He added:

"The consistent increase in the number of accounts sold the past year over that of the preceding year, is evidence that our type of product and policy of 'delivery as promised' meets with the approval of exhibitors of every class." He added:

"We have profited by our experience and we are prepared to capitalize on that experience. P.R.C. has now hit its stride in production, as evidenced by such pictures as 'Men of San Quentin,' 'The Mad Monster,' 'Bombs Over Burma' and 'Isle of Forgotten Sins,' all of which are set for early release; and with these as a criterion we will go into our new program with the certainty that we have what it takes for the exhibitor at the box office."

Mr. Greenblatt announced that the 1942-43 program of 42 productions would comprise the following groups: Six V Specials: "Queen of Burlesque," "Berlin Revolts," "Secrets of a Co-Ed," "Corregidor," "Lady From Chungking," and "The Way of the Jungle." The next group consists of eight Pacemakers: "Raiders of the Pacific," "The Lady Gambles," "Dead Men Walk," "The Black Raven," "Dragon Lady," "Sixth Column," "Rackets, Inc." and "A Yank in Libya."

In the Spitfire group are: "Queen of the Amazons," "Military School," "House of Fear," "Ferry Command," "North of the Yukon," "Wings of Vengeance," "The Black Pit," "The Yellow Monster," "Manhunt in the Mountains," "He Couldn't Take It."

Of the 18 westerns, six are "Billy the Kid" series, starring Buster Crabbe.

On the first day, addresses were made by Mr. Briggs, Mr. Fromkess, Mr. Greenblatt; Mr. Neufeld, supervisor of Western production; Robert Benjamin, member of the Board of Directors; Roberto Socas, export manager; Ralph Bettinson, representative for Pathe, Ltd., of Great Britain, and Joseph O'Sullivan, director of advertising and publicity.

Report on Foreign Business

Mr. Fromkess announced that Sigmund Neufeld in addition to supervising Westerns, would also produce several features for the new program. Mr. Neufeld has just completed production of "The Mad Monster," set for release this month.

The report of the Foreign Department made by Roberto Socas, export manager, showed that every country open to delivery had been sold and that sales had increased materially over the preceding year. Notwithstanding the difficulty of making deliveries, Mr. Socas said inquiries, particularly from Latin America, for the new product indicated that the rate of increase would be maintained.

Producers Releasing Meets

A MINIMUM of 42 pictures the coming season, under the company's "delivered as promised" policy, was assured Producers Releasing Corporation franchise holders and sales staff at the annual convention, Tuesday through Thursday, at the Hollywood-Roosevelt Hotel, Hollywood. A glimpse of convention personalities is afforded here: Bill Boyd, western star; Bill Flemion, Detroit franchise holder; O. Henry Briggs, president; Isaac Katz, Atlanta franchise holder; Dennis Moore, westerns player.

Warners Plan Regionals

Warner circuit managers in Ohio met Monday in Columbus and Tuesday in Cleveland, according to the territory covered. Harry Kalmine, assistant general manager of the circuit, conducted the sessions, assisted by Harry Goldberg, of Warners' theatres' division, and Nat Wolf, zone manager.

The distribution company will hold regional advance sales meetings in all key centers beginning next month, as a prelude to general release of "Sergeant York." Outlined, will be the new merchandising plan for the picture, completed by the home office advertising organization under Mort Blumenstock. Its pattern embraces every exchange center and trading area, and is specifically aimed to sell the "first time at popular prices" idea.

S. Charles Einfeld, the company's national director of advertising and publicity, is to confer at the New York home office next week with Mr. Blumenstock, Joseph Bernhard, and Ben Kalmenson, on national plans for "Yankee Doodle Dandy."

The company has 11 high-budget pictures, four with current war backgrounds, on shooting schcedule for May and June.

The war theme stories are "Casablanca," with Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman, directed by Michael Curtiz; "Air Force," about U .S. air fighters, to be directed by Howard Hawks; "Heroes Without Uniforms," with Edward G. Robinson, George Raft, John Garfield and Sydney Greenstreet, and "Across the Pacific," now shooting, with Humphrey Bogart and Mary Astor.

Texas Pledges Bond Aid; Hoblitzelle Heads Drive

At a rally of 2,500 employees and executives of the motion picture industry in Texas which was held this week every man present pledged 10 per cent of his weekly pay for investment in War Bonds. At the meeting, Karl Hoblitzelle, president of Interstate Theatres of Texas, was elected Commanding General of the Motion Picture Industry's War Co-operative effort in Texas.

The meeting started on Monday at nine o'clock in the morning. Many of those who attended joined in a parade from the Film Exchange Building in Dallas to the Palace Theatre where the rally took place. Film exchangemen, supply dealers, theatres—all were represented in the crowds which filled the huge playhouse. They carried banners, pennants, emblems, patriotic decorations and flags. A 100-piece band headed the parade. The new Commanding General led the marchers.

"The Star Spangled Banner" and "God Bless America" gave the rally a patriotic and martial atmosphere. Mr. Hoblitzelle put the case to all Texans who are in the motion picture industry; ten per cent of the entire industry's payroll in the Lone Star State was expected to be pledged to the purchase of War Bonds every week.

He indicated that while some might pledge less than 10 per cent, not a single man did so. Some went as high as 18 per cent, all enthusiastically. And then Mr. Hoblitzelle's election as Commanding General came by acclamation.

KARL HOBLITZELLE

W. A. Thomas, Internal Revenue Collector for the Fifth Congressional District and Director of the campaign for the sale of War Bonds in the district, was a speaker. He was introduced by R. J. O'Donnell, general manager of the Interstate Circuit.

Others speakers were Bill Harris, president of the Labor Council of Dallas and the Rev. B. J. Bender.

Mr. Hoblitzelle organized the meeting in response to requests from Washington. His selection as Commanding General was spontaneous.

Cohen, New York State chairman. More than 100 salesmen, branch managers and district managers, representing all exchanges in the city, attended the session at which Leo Brecher presided as chairman of the metropolitan area committee. Mr. Cohen advocated that similar meetings be held in every part of the state and throughout the country.

Nicholas M. $100,000,000 IN WAR BONDS GOAL OF 14,000 THEATRES

Press Book, Out This Week, Details Exploitation Possibilities for Exhibitors

More than 14,000 theatres in the United States have pledged to cooperate in the war bond and stamp sales drive which the theatres division of War Activities Committee of the Motion Picture Industry will launch on May 30th in an effort to mobilize the nation's film-goers to buy war-time securities. The goal is $100,000,000 worth in 12 months.

According to Joseph Bernhard, chairman of the theatres' division, the drive "makes the industry an important part of the war effort. It gathers together all theatre activity, now diffused in purely local activities, into one mighty machine for war work. It brings the motion picture theatres into public notice as a powerful instrument in the struggle for victory. . . . The theatres are the only places throughout the nation where crowds of people may be served 365 nights as well as days in the purchase of these war-time securities."

The drive will continue for the duration. There will be no theatre collections.

Opening gun of the campaign is an elaborate press book, prepared by War Activities Committee and mailed to exhibitors throughout the country this week. The book is a "call to service," urging every showman to help American moviegoers buy war bonds and stamps. It was designed to aid the exhibitor promote the maximum sales of war securities. As Mr. Bernhard pointed out in the call, "If your theatres are already selling bonds and stamps, without waiting for the exhibitors as a whole to go into action, now is the time to unite with everybody in this one effort."

Promotion Ideas Offered Exhibitors

The press book contains ideas, suggestions and proposals for the exhibitor, explaining how he can serve most effectively in the campaign. At the outset, WAC makes this request of the exhibitor: "Please read every word of this campaign book. If every theatre manager of every theatre reads every word of this book—and acts upon what he reads—it will mean that every word is worth about $25,000 to the Government over the coming year. It should be no trick for the American movie theatres to sell $100,000,000 worth of bonds in 12 months."

While preparing for the campaign, a poll was made of about 200 theatre managers. They were asked what method they would prefer in selling the stamps. Opinions differed, declared WAC, apparently depending upon the individual theatre's business and physical structure. For that reason the committee did not set up any rigid instructions on how the exhibitor was to conduct the sale. Among the suggestions offered theatremen, however, are the following:

1. Lobby: Place a table, with appropriate display in conspicous spot in lobby with a volunteer worker as saleslady.

CAMPAIGN ANSWERS MORGENTHAU APPEAL

The War Bonds and Stamps sales campaign was launched by the War Activities Committee in response to a letter written by Secretary of the Treasury, Henry W. Morgenthau, Jr., last March. The letter was as follows:

"The results attained to date by those theatres which have been selling Defense Savings Stamps lead me to express the hope that arrangements can be worked out through your committee for Defense Savings Stamps to be put on sale in all motion picture theatres or at least the vast majority affiliated with your committee. Joint planning and unified action under your auspices would certainly expand the volume of sales and enable us to reach people of all ages and income levels.

"The cooperation which the United States Treasury Department has received thus far from your committee assures us that any drive undertaken by you and conducted with the vigor and showmanship which marks all your activities will result in a greatly increased sale of Defense Savings Stamps.

"On the basis of conversations between the Defense Savings Staff and representatives of your committee we are hopeful that we can again look to you for prompt and effective action."

2. Boxoffice: Have cashiers sell stamps at ticket-window; appropriate placard announces sale. This method can be combined with lobby sale—selling at boxoffice only during slack hours. Asking patrons to accept stamps as change is used by some theatres. Use your own judgment.

3. Candy stands: If you can't have a special table in lobby or sell at boxoffice, the candy stand, because it already has an attendant, may be found convenient. However, other methods may attract more buyers.

4. Check rooms: This would be a secondary spot if you have none better.

5. Outside theatre: Many enthusiastic theatre staffs will boost their sales by going away from the theatre—ushers, projectionists and others will sell stamps to their friends and credit the sales to the theatre. This additional selling will pile up tremendous returns.

7. Friends and patrons: Many folks who are buying war bonds have no preference as to where they obtain them. Suggest to regular patrons, whom you know personally, that your theatre will be happy to obtain bonds for them.

7. Special ideas: Exhibitors who have been selling war stamps tell us that novel patron-participation stunts in their lobbies increased sales.

In addition to suggesting sample copy ideas, lobby displays, slogans, newspaper layouts and other exploitation material, the press book details the actual physical steps which exhibitors should take to make the drive successful. WAC suggests that each theatre should start the drive by stocking up with a supply of 10 and 25-cent stamps, plus 10 and 25-cent stamp albums. If patrons demand 50-cent or $1 stamps, a supply of these should be on hand. The exhibitor is asked to purchase the stamps himself from his nearest post office, which purchase must be financed by the individual theatre. Large, first-run houses may want to keep on hand about $200 worth of stamps while smaller, subsequent run theatres may put in stocks as little as $5 or $10.

HOLLYWOOD PRESSES DRIVE FOR PAYROLL BOND BUYING

Radio Programs, Employee Meetings Push Program for War Bond Purchases

Nationwide publicity via radio and press was given this week to the motion picture industry's activities on behalf of war bond purchases, three weeks before the May 30th launching of the campaign by War Activities Committee to sell wartime securities to America's moviegoers in film theatres throughout the country.

On Monday night, over a national hook-up reaching an estimated audience of 30,000,000, the Hollywood bond payroll purchase plan was explained and on the same day, the country's press carried the news of the forthcoming premiere in New York of Warner Bros. "Yankee Doodle Dandy," with opening night seat sales ranging from $25,000 to $25 per seat, proceeds to go towards swelling war bond sales.

The War Activities Committee also announced in New York that a total of 14,147 theatres in the country had pledged to run all Victory Films and to cooperate with the committee. Most recent releases are "Any Bonds Today," "Lake Carrier," and a film for United China Relief.

War Activities Committee has received personal pledges of cooperation in the May 30th drive from Edward M. Fay, Roy E. Harrold, Martin G. Smith, Herman M. Levy, Arthur H. Lockwood, Morton H. Thalheimer, Marc J. Wolf, E. M. Loew and Harold Stoneman.

De Mille, Stars Broadcast Hollywood Drive

At the conclusion of his regular Monday night Lux Radio Hour program, over the Columbia Broadcasting System, film and radio director Cecil B. DeMille held an interview with Joan Fontaine and her husband, Brian Aherne, during which he outlined the purpose and working scheme of the Hollywood payroll purchase plan, which he characterized as "democracy at work to sell war bonds."

The plan, set up by the Motion Picture Committee for Hollywood, is operating to educate all studio employes to invest 10 per cent of their earnings in bonds. More than 400 persons associated with the industry on the West Coast, major and independent studio workers, unions, guilds, organizations, agents, business managers, independent publicists, offices and allied groups, are voluntary salesmen.

Hope to Raise $100,000 Weekly

Approximately $100,000 on the payroll plan already has been pledged, it was said, as compared with $30,000 weekly before the current drive started and it is expected that it would reach the $150,000 mark by the end of this week.

A minimum of $300,000 a week for the duration invested in bonds by Hollywood is the goal for this over-all campaign being conducted by the committee, in cooperation with the Treasury Department. This will represent $250,000 weekly on the payroll savings plan and $50,000 weekly from cash sales of bonds and stamps. It is estimated that by this plan, 10 per cent of the industry's earnings are already going into the Treasury and by this system, 100 bombers a year will have been purchased through the organized efforts of Hollywood alone.

Reports from the committee of bond sales to date are as follows:

MGM: $12,500 weekly invested through payroll savings, covering 2,010 out of 4,000 regular employees, averaging 200 new pledges a day. A total of $100,000 in cash bond sales for the month of April; working towards a goal of $50,000 weekly on payroll and cash sales. Warner Bros.: $16,213 weekly, with 2,604 employes signed up; $30,000 goal for payroll savings weekly. RKO: $6,500 weekly, with 53 per cent of employes signed up. Columbia: $5,687 weekly; goal, a weekly minimum of $12,000. Universal: 800 employes buying $4,693 bonds weekly with a double this total goal expected. 20th Century-Fox: $15,055 weekly from 2,300 workers; also $4,250 weekly averaged in cash sales. Paramount: $21,539 weekly, 78 per cent of employes participating.

Agents, Managers, Others Participate

Republic: $3,000 weekly; Monogram. $600 weekly. Organiztion on the payroll plan, according to the committee, has begun at the Hal Roach, Samuel Goldwyn, Walt Disney and other independent studios.

Agents, business managers and publicists are now subscribing $6,100 a week in payroll pledges. All employes of the Myron Selznick agency are investing $1,400 weekly. The allied field, at present partially organized but which will be fully coordinated during this week, is now pledging $1,800 weekly, with an anticipated doubled figure. All employes of the Screen Actors Guild offices are subscribing $1,400 weekly, the amount representing 14½ per cent of their payroll each week.

The executive committee of Motion Picture Committee for Hollywood includes representatives from the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, Conference of Studio Unions, Motion Picture International Committee, Screen Writers Guild, Screen Publicists Guild, Screen Actors Guild, agents, business managers, publicity directors, Hollywood columnists, Motion Picture Producers Association, all studios and every allied business in the film capital.

'Yankee Doodle' to Help War Chest

The highest price motion picture performance accolade will go to Warner Bros. production "Yankee Doodle Dandy," starring James Cagney, when it opens at the Hollywood Theatre on Broadway the night of May 29th. A $25,000 top price scale ranging downward to $25, with entire proceeds going into war bonds will mark the film's debut. Announcement of the event which is under the auspices of the Treasury Department, was made on Monday in New York by Col. Richard C. Patterson, Jr., New York state chairman of the War Savings Staff. With the 1,500 seat theatre scaled from $25,000 to $25, aggregate revenue expected from the premiere is $5,000,000 in war bonds. Method of disposing of the seats for the opening was not disclosed, however. New York City's war bond drive quota, according to Colonel Patterson, is pledged at the annual rate of $1,500,000,000, with the State quota set at $2,000,000,000.

Paramount, Fox Set Trailers for Campaign

In conjunction with the bond and stamp drive which will be launched on May 30th in all the motion picture theatres of the country, Paramount and 20th Century-Fox are making newsreel inserts of Dorothy Lamour and Tyrone Power, the first for the week of May 7th and the latter for the week of May 30th.

Practically every theatre in Oklahoma has already pledged to aid in the campaign for war bond and stamp sales, with scores of houses of the Griffith Amusement Company showing a special five-minute trailer boosting the drive. The trailer, with sound, features Lew Wentz, head of the campaign in Oklahoma, in a round table discussion of the various phases of the drive with four other Oklahomans.

The Trans-Lux Theatre Circuit in New York announced that it had inaugurated the sale of war bonds and stamps in its theatres in cooperation with the American Women's Voluntary Service. This pre-dates the regular campaign forthcoming the last week in May.

OCD DROPS THEATRE DEFENSE TALKS

Responding to opposition voiced by New York exhibitors, the Office of Civilian Defense of Greater New York called off a campaign which was to bring three-minute speakers into every motion picture theatre in the city on Tuesday night.

Circuit and independent exhibition leaders opposed the move on the ground that any appeals directed to film audiences should be placed on the screen. It was pointed out that many important war subjects were being shown in first run and neighborhood houses but the introduction of speakers would create a bad precedent.

POWER SHORTAGE MAY DIM MARQUEES IN NEW AREAS

WPB Order on Conservation Paves Way for Limitation of Theatre Lights

Theatre marquees in a number of communities may be dimmed within the next few months because of power shortages created by continued drought and increased demand of war industries for electricity.

Paving the way for imposition of restrictions in areas where deficiencies of current may occur, the War Production Board in Washington last week issued an order "to assure a steady flow of power to war industries and essential civilian services by curtailing non-essential uses."

However, the board assured, "curtailment of electricity for regular consumers will not take place until an area becomes a power shortage area."

In anticipation of difficulties, the board ordered all power companies to form "grids" by which power may be transferred from one area to another as needed.

Shortage Will Limit Air Conditioning

It was explained that when a power shortage developed, the director of industry operations would define the shortage area and issue specific directions to relieve the situation.

The plan to be followed is along the lines of the conservation programs put into effect in southeastern states last year.

It will prohibit the use of current for air conditioning except where necessary for industrial processes.

It will ban all interior or exterior sign lighting, show-window or show case lighting; interior or exterior outline and ornamental lighting; interior or exterior lighting for decorative or advertising purposes; outdoor and flood lighting, including field lighting for amusements or sports and "white-way" lighting above minimum requirements for safety.

Interior lighting will be limited to one watt per square foot of floor area in any commercial or other establishment open to the public, except offices and other interiors in which the visual tasks are difficult and prolonged.

Restrictions During Peak Periods

If necessary, the use of current during peak periods may be restricted or prohibited, an action, it was said, which would affect all consumers; or the consumption of large non-residential consumers using more than 2,500 kilowatt hours a week may be restricted to a weekly quota based on a percentage of their power consumption in April, 1942, or any other period fixed by the board.

While the board did not disclose where power shortages might be expected, surveys of utility facilities were made last year which showed that there might be deficiencies in a number of important areas. The board said that in some areas shortages of electric power already had occurred, but did not name them.

BLACKOUT RECORDS FOR THEATRES

Recordings have been made to accommodate motion picture audiences during air raid emergencies, according to a report from Los Angeles last week by the Associated Press. The first record interrupts the film program to announce a blackout and requests audience cooperation. The second, at the close of the feature picture, reminds the patrons that the Army forbids any one to leave the theatre until the all clear is sounded, and the third recording announces the blackout is over and thanks the audience on behalf of the management.

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Theatre Defense Bureau announced this week that Rodney Pantages, a member of the bureau, and B. V. Sturdivant, director, working with engineers of the Eastman Kodak Company, have devised a theatre lobby blackout lamp which has been approved by local defense authorities. Sketches showing its construction and methods are being issued this week to members in the bureau's bulletin.

Broadway Has First Blackout

Last Thursday night from 9:30 to 9:50, marked Broadway's first experience with a test blackout and reports indicated that theatre business dropped 20 to 50 per cent as a result. The decrease was greater among the neighborhood houses throughout mid-Manhattan, it was said. About 100 theatres were affected in the blackout area from 14th Street to 123rd Street, comprising an estimated total population of 1,000,000.

Observers estimated that 400,000 persons crowded the Times Square sector to watch the total darkening of the world's largest amusement center. The throng was compared to a New Year's eve crowd and drew sharp criticism from Mayor LaGuardia who foreshadowed great danger of such a densely populated area in the event of an air raid. The spectators, however, were considerably more subdued than holiday celebrants and for the most part complied with police and air raid warden orders.

The test gave Broadway theatres and business places their first opportunity to sample the effectiveness of precautionary methods adopted months ago and also offered police and city authorities the first opportunity to handle the situation.

First-run houses on Broadway darkened their box offices but many patrons were still able to gain entrance into theatres. A number of theatre managers reported that ten minutes after the blackout started many people began to drift into the Broadway houses. The Paramount Theatre set up its Broadway box office in the outer lobby and the Radio City Music Hall closed all its box offices with the exception of the one located underground at its subway entrance.

The Army's serious dissatisfaction with New York City's reaction to dimout regulations to protect Atlantic Coast shipping, it was reported, was reflected over the weekend in an order by Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine who directed that warnings of heavy penalties be given to all violators. This would include managers of motion picture theatres and other amusement places. It was pointed out, however, that the Army was disatisfied principally with exterior advertising signs "which are not being properly screened or extinguished." New York's first dimout took place last Wednesday night, on the eve of mid-Manhattan's first blackout.

Business Loss Expected

Exhibitors, meanwhile, expected no adverse effect on theatre business along Broadway as a result of the permanent dimout. Operators, however, in New Haven, Nantucket, Revere, Cohasset, Marblehead, Swampscott, Beverly and other coastal cities and towns in the New England area, expected that the Eastern Coast dimout would result in a loss of business. In these towns, frequented by summer vacationists in great numbers, it was said there will be little or no amusement business at night. If the present order stands, some exhibitors believe it will undoubtedly mean the closing of many theatres this summer.

New Haven, termed the "principal sore spot" in the dimout of the Connecticut shore area because of certain industrial situations on the Long Island Sound, reported that boxoffices were not too badly affected in the city, but that shore towns complained of the immediate effect and were concerned with the problem of summer business. Exhibitors of Madison, Saybrook, Clinton, Guilford and Westbrook met last week to discuss this matter.

Movable Boxoffices for Blackouts

A new movable boxoffice designed to aid theatremen during blackouts, has been developed and is about to be formally announced by the National Theatre Supply Company, it was reported in New York last week. The new boxoffices have a shelf for a coin changer, a drawer for money and a ticket dispenser. It was said the creation would aid during blackouts and would also help exhibitors sell war bonds and stamps at normal times.

One hundred independent film theatre managers who have completed the official 10-week air raid warden course were presented with a certificate at a luncheon held at the Statler Hotel last Thursday, sponsored by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

It was only a small blaze at the Gig Harbor Theatre, at Gig Harbor, Washington, doing but minor damage, but for a time it looked pretty serious. It brought out not only the volunteer fire department but all of the town's 441 citizens.

In rushing to fight the blaze, one of the firemen fouled a fire hydrant and the boys couldn't hitch up the hose. Another fireman grabbed the other end of the hose and rolled it down the street to the next hydrant. Meanwhile the crew had freed the first hydrant, connected the hose and turned on the water. They then discovered both ends of the line were connected to the water system.

The water went round and round, and came out in the middle, in one grand bust.

Sir Thomas Beecham, British conductor of Gounod's Romeo and Juliet at the St. Denis Theatre, in Montreal, the other night, turned on an audience which had begun applauding a chorus too early and shouted:

"Silence. Don't applaud before the orchestra has finished playing."

When the orchestra did finish the audience pursed its lips at Sir Thomas and went: "Bo-o-o-o."

British Government agents learned he possessed considerable knowledge and had quite some experience in motion pictures and United Kingdom authorities tipped off the Canadian Government that it would be all right with them if the German could be used by the Canadian Film Board. It had discovered that although a German national, his views were not in sympathy with Nazism. So he is now working for the defeat of Hitler in his homeland, as a member of the film board staff.

Shades of yesteryear were raised, the other day, when Paramount formally announced that its Hollywood studio was testing Pola Negri, to determine whether she would do for a part in Buddy De Sylva's "For Whom the Bell Tolls." Testing Pola after all these years.

Rube (Ruby) Greenberg, 31, who was killed two weeks ago in the Sunday night crash of a Hudson tube train in Jersey City, on the way to his Brooklyn home from his Rex Theatre, Irvington, New Jersey, probably died because he was courteous.

Murray Pearl, manager of the Lyric, Newark, had boarded that train. Mr. Pearl is much older, in his sixties.

The two men chatted. The car was crowded. Greenberg gave his seat to the older man, stood over him, still chatting.

The crash came. The younger man, now standing, died. The older man, seated, was merely injured.

To this was added a further note: Greenberg was on the train because he was working at the theatre, on Sunday, ordinarily his day off; he had taken off a mid-week day to visit his wife in a hospital, where she bore Ruby a child, his first.

Paramount, the other day, was forced to go 'way inland, to Salt Lake, in Utah, from Hollywood, to film scenes purporting to show Jap planes, with the Rising Sun insignia, fighting U. S. Neither Paramount nor the Army would take the chance of allowing planes with the Jap enemy insignia to fly in mock battle with American airships in the skies over California. That would be all the coastline air defenders and the populace would need.

As a precautionary measure against injuries and separations during sudden Pacific Coast blackouts or daytime air raid warnings, Vierling Kersey, superintendent of Los Angeles public schools, has decreed that child movie players, while working on a motion picture set, or on location, must never be out of sight of parents or guardians. Prewar watching was handled by only two persons, a teacher and a trained nurse.

The Loew-Metro Capitol Theatre, on Broadway, New York, sent the following announcement to the press:

> "Twin beds are of utmost importance in development of enduring, happy married life, decreed Justice Ernest O. Emmerling of Superior Court, Dayton, Ohio, this week in dismissing a 'snore-victim's' divorce complaint. The disputants were ordered to trade in the family heirloom, a double-duty old bundling job, in exchange for streamlined modern twin beds. As an afterthought, the court also ordered the disputants to kiss and make up in public. 'Now that all this is settled, I order you to go together and see the next showing of the Joan Bennett film, "Twin Beds".' The comedy-riot, 'Twin Beds', is now on Broadway shaking Capitol Theatre audiences with mirth."

Dear Neal,

DeMille and Paramount have again hit the bull's eye with "REAP THE WILD WIND."

I, personally, thought DeMille had a tough assignment, following his "NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE," but there is no doubt in my mind that he has another winner in "REAP THE WILD WIND."

After previewing the picture we have not hesitated to arrange an increased scale of admission prices for the coming engagement at the Warfield Theatre, starting Friday, April 24th.

Congratulations.

Gentlemen:

May we congratulate you on the new Cecil deMille picture REAP THE WILD WIND. In our opinion, this picture has everything to make it an outstanding box office success story, cast, direction and excellent color. It is certainly a very fitting offering by Mr. deMille as his 30th Anniversary picture and shows so well that his talent has kept abreast of the times. This is the kind of picture that patrons anywhere will be glad to pay a higher than usual admission price to see and you should not have objections from exhibitors on admission price increases, but rather you should get their enthusiastic cooperation and approval.

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

ESTEEMED EDITOR:

Monday amusement was provided the Town by young William Saroyan, departing the auspices of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer informally and with gestures of the kind that have come to be regarded as characteristic of the carefree Californian who made Broadway goose step to his whimsy in the matter of "The Time of Your Life" and seemed in a fair way to duplicate that accomplishment in these parts.

On Monday the young man wrote for a local publication a bit of a fantasy entitled "Why I Am No Longer at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer" which didn't clarify the case specifically but did amuse the citizenry quite some.

The Saroyan career in Culver City was of 90 days duration and it is to be said that he decorated it with utterances and doings entitling it to rank as a 90 day wonder.

It began with his sale of a story to the studio, "The Human Comedy," reportedly as a vehicle for Mickey Rooney, and the signing of a contract calling for his services as producer and director.

Stories of his artistic behaviorism—the acquisition of a player-piano, the trick garb, the quoteful conversations engaged in with all comers—kept the fact of his presence on the lot of Leo the Lion a wide open secret.

By way of a limbering-up exercise, he wrote and directed a short, "The Good Job," which is as yet in process of editing or cutting, or somewhere, unseen save by the staff and doubtless those executives who decide about who does what next and when and whether.

Meanwhile Mickey Rooney has been at work in "A Yank at Eton" and start of production on "The Human Comedy" has not occurred.

Unofficial studio comment (the company is maintaining its usual dignified silence up to now) is to the effect that it is felt someone other than Saroyan, someone whose experience is of a seasoning to warrant an upper bracket budget, should be assigned to direct the production.

Belief is that this is the point on which the playwright whose stage success won a Pulitzer Prize declined to see eye to eye with his bosses.

In any case, the young man has evacuated the premises, whereas his bosses have not, and it is in this particular that his deportment since arriving in Hollywood deviates sharply and for the first time from the precedent established by the Orson Welles to whom he has been not unfavorably compared by best friends and severest critics.

Welles supplied the Town with plenty of amusement, on Mondays and other days, without getting off payroll.

Geniuses are not classically considered mindful of details like this, but Hollywood ever has been, is and doubtless shall be.

STUDIO BREATHER

Production took a bit of a breather this week, statistically speaking, the total falling to 34 pictures shooting, for a net loss of six from the week before. Thirteen films were finished, as to camera attention, and only seven supplanted them on the stages.

Deep down on page 19 of a voluminous document phrasing, with full benefit of legalistic collaboration, the agreement about to be entered into by the producers and the Screen Writers Guild after six years of negotiation appears, as Provision V, this detail:

"Credits will be given for screen play authorship on all 24-sheets, billboard and trade paper advertising issued by the producer."

It is among the last and dealt with as among the least of a large number of details arranged for in a comprehensive contract.

Interesting?

There's more than a good picture in "My Favorite Spy," Harold Lloyd's production starring Kay Kyser.

There is in it also, to the profit of the screen, a demonstration, the first of its kind, of an actor's ability to project his artistry in terms of another's performance.

The comedies of Harold Lloyd had always about them a quality shared by none other.

In the day of their steady flow it was assumed that this quality stemmed from the personality of Harold Lloyd himself, but the delicate alchemy of the phenomenon was not to be fully understood until now.

It is to be understood, still a bit darkly, but positively, after a look at this production to which he has given everything of himself except his person.

The pattern of the picture is the Lloyd pattern, of which the public never gave a sign of having had enough.

And the performance of Kay Kyser—even, in a distinctly appreciable way, the appearance of Kay Kyser—is in all but actuality a Harold Lloyd performance.

How this has been achieved is something for experts and analysts to discover.

That it has been achieved, and therefore doubtless can be achieved again and again, is something for showmen and customers to be grateful.

Everybody hereabouts is reading—or trying to get a copy of, by fair means or else—John Steinbeck's "The Moon Is Down."

The stampede started on the way when the news came through that Twentieth Century-Fox had bought it for $300,000.

Up until then it had been just a best-seller. After that it became a must.

If the local sprint to the bookstalls is symptomatic of the country-wide response, a somewhat staggering total number of ready-made customers for the picture would appear to be assured.

The price thus takes on, in Hollywood's calculations, a reasonableness it lacked heretofore.

It is also in Hollywood's calculations, after reading the book, as it was also in the case of the same author's "Grapes of Wrath," that the subject can be produced at a figure leaving plenty of room inside a practical negative-cost for accommodation of the $300,000 purchase-price.

As of now the transaction stacks up as a studio scoop.—W. R. W.

NEW ASCAP HEAD HITS BACK AT THEATRE OWNER CRITICS

Charges Hollywood, Not Society, 'Racketeers' on Fees for Music Use

If payment by theatres for music performing rights is "racketeering," then such accusations should be directed against Hollywood's producers, not against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, according to Deems Taylor, new president of ASCAP.

Producers are the "racketeers" if theatre operators must pay twice for the music in their films, Mr. Taylor observed last week during an interview at New York. They have, he asserted, in many instances attempted to pass on music charges to the exhibitor, despite the fact that theatres pay a per-seat tax to the composer through the society. His comment was evoked during discussion of the recent anti-trust action filed against ASCAP by 100 independent theatres.

Mr. Taylor said that he did not see why ASCAP should not continue to collect fees from theatres for its members' music. Hollywood, he indicated, has consistently resisted attempts to institute a fair payment at source plan, and has shown reluctance to discontinue the "historic" precedent of music payments by theatres, established before the advent of sound.

Despite the fact that formal music scoring charges were eliminated from the exhibitors bill several years ago, Mr. Taylor expressed the belief that distributors still made the theatre man pay their music costs. "Why don't they tack on the cost of the script, salaries, rent or any other item?" he asked.

Cites Consent Decree On Monopoly Charge

The entire question of whether ASCAP operated as a monopoly in restraint of trade, which charge the independent exhibitors made in their complaint, had already been decided by the Federal Government, Mr. Taylor said, when it submitted the consent decree provisions to the society. Further than that, he would not comment, saying, "I am not a lawyer."

The critic-composer pointed out that when ASCAP was founded in 1914 "there were no movies, no radio," and that the society's operations, therefore, obviously changed with new conditions.

In discussing his recent election to the presidency by the ASCAP board and its significant aspects, Mr. Taylor said, "This is not a purge." He characterized the move as a means, "in general, of simplifying—I hate to use the word 'streamline'—the organization of the society." He has been an ASCAP member since 1927 and a director since 1933.

Gene Buck had served as president of ASCAP since 1923 and from 1927 on, with an annual salary of $50,000 which he voluntarily cut to $35,000 last year at the height of the organization's expensive war with the major radio networks.

By Staff Photographer

DEEMS TAYLOR, new president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Reiterating that the functions of ASCAP had changed radically since 1914, Mr. Taylor declared:

"We don't need a fighting president any more. Our job now is to continue as a collection agency and to protect the best interests of our membership, both writers and publishers alike.

"I think the best thing that could have happened to us was the consent decree, which made us organize on a more democratic basis. We wouldn't have done it ourselves. No oligarchy wants to give up its power," he said:

'No Oligarchy Waits To Relinquish Power'

Queried whether Mr. Buck's passing from the ASCAP scene and the board's action in giving the former president a 15-year contract at an annual salary of $25,000 to act in a "consultant and advisory capacity" was not in the nature of a "payoff," Mr. Taylor emphatically said "No. Gene Buck served ASCAP since 1923. He gave up his theatrical career for the organization. I think the society owes him something."

The critic-composer would not comment on reports that Mr. Buck was slated to be replaced ever since last year, when certain publisher-members, over a period of months, stormed at the "excessive" administrative costs and the alleged "mishandling" by ASCAP of the entire rift with radio broadcasters.

Mr. Taylor indicated, however, that the change of leadership came about as a result of the board's desire to effect greater coordination and more effective executive operations. He said the board's vesting full authority in general manager John G. Paine, subject to approval by the president and the executive committee, was proof of this intention.

"There are no revolutionary changes anticipated," Mr. Taylor declared, and outlined the primary objectives confronting the society at the moment. "We intend to improve relations with our customers. The incentive 'to put the heat' on our customers has been removed," he asserted, referring to ASCAP's recent move in replacing lawyer representatives with organization men for the purpose of collecting music licensing fees. "We also plan to inaugurate a service to radio users of music. We intend to continue to fight anti-ASCAP legislation. We are now working on the entire problem of classification payment to writer and publisher members," he pointed out, disclosing that publishers' and writers' committees currently are studying the various proposals for re-classification of payment, long a bone of contention among ASCAP's "little men."

Radio's Foremost Music Commentator

Mr. Taylor is considered the foremost radio commentator on music. He is intermission commentator for the New York Philharmonic concerts over Columbia Broadcasting System on Sundays; master of ceremony of the Prudential Family Hour. He also serves CBS as musical consultant. His election was considered by observers as significant of ASCAP's new trend in policies which, since the radio war ended last year, have been to treat the broadcasting industry as a good customer for ASCAP wares rather than as a target for abuse.

The new president indicated that perhaps the society would have to be more "discriminating" in its policy of accepting new members, saying: "We want to get those writers who can produce the most." Asked whether if that were true, why had the society recently elected Archibald MacLeish, director of the Office of Facts and Figures, to ASCAP membership on the basis of several of his poems which have been set to music, Mr. Taylor replied: "That's obvious. You can answer that yourself."

No 'Radical Changes' Says Paine

John G. Paine, general manager of the society and ASCAP's new active head, reiterated Mr. Taylor's contention that the recent actions of the board of directors did not preclude the possibility of any "revolutionary changes." "We don't anticipate any radical reorganization, but we do anticipate an acceleration of the policies that have already been established as to customer relations. There is no reason why a purchaser of ASCAP music can't be shown how to make the most out of his investment," he said and declared that the society intended to continue such service with greater intensity.

Mr. Paine disclosed that a specific radio program script service which has been in preparation for some months, would be officially announced to the radio industry at the convention of the National Association of Broadcasters in Cleveland on May 12th.

Combined consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partly owned companies for the year aggregated $10,251,242. The comparative figures for the fiscal year of 1940 (53 weeks) were consolidated earnings of $6,402,130, which included discount on purchase of the company's debentures and share of undistributed earnings of partially owned companies of $98,066 and $1,231,000 respectively, a combined total of $7,633,130.

The amount earned per common share for the year 1941 on the basis of combined consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partially owned companies was $3.41 as compared with $2.64 for the year 1940.

At a meeting of the board of directors April 28th, the common stock was placed on a regular dividend basis of $.25 quarterly.

Cites Cooperation In War Effort

In his report Mr. Balaban said:

"The Paramount organization and subsidiary and affiliated companies are cooperating wholeheartedly with our Government in the war effort. Motion picture entertainment is recognized as an important factor in bolstering morale of our armed forces and the public. Your company, together with the other companies in the industry, is making available to the War Department, without cost, a large number of its current motion picture productions for gratis showing to our expeditionary forces in combat areas.

"Balaban & Katz, an important subsidiary, has made available to the Navy Department, also without cost, its television station in Chicago, including all facilities and technicians. Here classes of about 150 enlisted Navy men at a time are receiving training for special service in aircraft deduction and other technical pursuits important to the war effort.

"The accompanying consolidated balance sheet shows that cash on January 3, 1942, amounted to $12,101,572. Of this amount $2,891,505 represented balances in foreign countries other than Canada, as follows: Great Britain $2,268,022, Australia and New Zealand $507,968, and other foreign countries, principally South America, $115,515. Total current assets were $40,273,888 and current liabilities $11,108,624, leaving a net working capital of $29,165,264.

"On January 4, 1941, there was outstanding $10,188,200 principal amount of 3¼ per cent Convertible Debentures due March 1, 1947. On February 24, 1941, your company sold to five banks an additional $2,492,800 principal amount of these obligations. By Exchange Offer dated October 9, 1941, the holders of these 3¼ per cent Convertible Debentures and the holders of certain corporate notes of your company totaling $7,355,782 were given the right to exchange these securities for an equal amount of 4 per cent debentures due 1956. As a result of the Exchange Offer $11,344,700 principal amount of the 3¼ per cent Convertible Debentures and $6,294,000 of corporate notes were exchanged. The balance of the 3% per cent Convertible Debentures aggregating $1,336,300 were redeemed on December 12, 1941. On January 3, 1942, there was outstanding $17,618,700 principal amount of 4 per cent debentures due 1956, after deducting $20,000.

"Since January 3, 1942, an additional $1,199,000 principal amount of 4 per cent debentures due 1956 has been issued in exchange for corporate notes and other obligations; and the company has acquired for sinking fund purposes an additional $1,250,000 principal amount of these debentures. The indenture under which the 4 per cent debentures are issued requires that annual sinking fund payments be made to the trustee commencing May 15, 1943, in an amount equivalent to 15 per cent of the consolidated net earnings of the company and its subsidiaries for the preceding fiscal year up to $10,000,000, 20% of amounts in excess thereof."

FILMS' TECHNICAL ADVANCE SEEN ESSENTIAL TO MORALE

SMPE Convention Told Progress "Will Not Hibernate"; DeMille Speaker

Motion picture engineers and scientists will not "go into hibernation" during the war; rather, they will promote the technical progress of films, as a definite contribution to morale in many fields, Emery Huse, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, told the Society's 51st semi-annual convention, at the Hollywood-Roosevelt Hotel, that city, Monday. The convention opened that day and was to close Friday.

Mr. Huse was but one of a host of speakers, who read papers outlining the latest developments in the sciences of film and sound, and for which papers were read. Cecil Be DeMille, producer, was the principal speaker, delivering the opening address at an informal luncheon Monday, and conveying greetings from the production division of the motion picture industry. Other important speakers were scheduled for Wednesday evening, at the organization's 51st semi-annual banquet and dance.

Mr. Huse said: "We can't afford to slow down on anything these days. The motion picture engineers have recognized that fact and, despite the pressure of their regular duties, have contributed more than 50 technical papers to our convention program. This would have been an unusual showing in normal times; it is truly remarkable under the circumstances."

Among the notables attending the convention, were E. A. Williford, of New York, past-president; Frank E. Carlson, of Cleveland, L. I. Ryder, of Hollywood, and Dr. E. M. Honan, of Hollywood, members of the board of governors; A. C. Downes, of Cleveland, editorial vice-president; J. G. Frayne, of Hollywood, chairman of the SMPE Pacific Coast section; Sylvan Harris, editor of the SMPE Journal and manager of the SMPE headquarters in New York.

Army, Navy Use Of Films Told

The role of the motion picture in war was graphed by representatives of the Army and the Navy Monday.

Captain Guy J. Newhard, Chief of the Motion Picture Branch, Technical Data Section of the Air Corps, told the engineers of the numerous uses to which motion pictures are put at the Army's Wright Field, in Ohio. He pointed out that movies are made of tests which are too fast, too complicated, or too remote for accurate observation by the eye. More than 20,000,000 feet of film are being used for that purpose this year, as compared with 1,000,000 feet in 1941.

Lieut. William Exton, Jr., U. S. Naval Reserve, told the delegates of the many uses the Navy makes of movies in training. Pointing out that it is essential that all Navy personnel have the same training in order that standardization be achieved, Lieutenant Exton said that the rapidly expanding fleet has made it necessary to spread experienced personnel throughout the entire Navy.

40,000 THEATRES IN SOVIET RUSSIA

There are 40,000 motion picture theatres in Soviet Russia, according to G. L. Irsky of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, wartime representative of the Soviet Union in New York. Reporting on the film industry in Russia at the SMPE convention in Hollywood this week, Mr. Irsky explained that because of the variety of dialects about 80 per cent of the Russian productions had to be translated into from 30 to 40 national languages before release.

He told the engineers that a special theatre had been built in Moscow for the presentation of three-dimensional movies.

The technical progress of the motion picture art in Russia was reviewed by G. L. Irsky, of the Amtorg Trading Corp., wartime representative of the Soviet Union in New York City. Mr. Irsky is chief engineer of the motion picture industry in Russia.

Symposium Held On Production

Regarded as the outstanding technical discussion of the convention, a symposium on the technique of film production, from raw stock to the theatre, began Monday night and continued, evenings, through Friday. The program was an entirely new development, which it was hoped, would lead to publication of the first comprehensive textbook on motion picture engineering.

The first step, cinematography, or the technique of photography with a motion picture camera, was described Monday evening by John W. Boyle, an engineer on the staff of Universal Pictures, in collaboration with others. Illumination, on which the ultimate success of a film depends, was discussed by the following: R. G. Linderman, of the Mole-Richardson Co.; C. W. Handley, of the National Carbon Co.; Alston Rodgers, of General Electric; and Mr. Boyle. The third subject, laboratory practices, was covered by J. R. Wilkinson, of the Paramount studios.

Describes Film on Raid Precautions

Monday, also, there were papers by Henry Anderson, Paramount, who described a film made by the company to prepare personnel in air raid precautions; by Leon Becker, Warners, "Motion Pictures: Technology in Art"; by Carl Freund, of the American Society of Cinematograpers, on the Norwood Exposure Meter, in measuring set illumination and actors' faces and costumes.

Tuesday, Bernard B. Brown, of Universal Pictures, revealed some of the secrets of pre-scoring, which enables the artist to be at his best musically and photogenically—ordinarily not always possible at the same time.

Other contributors to the symposium that day were H. G. Tasker, Paramount, on "Production Sound"; and L. T. Goldsmith, Warners, on "Re-Recording."

Sound Recording Systems Covered

Wednesday, J. K. Hilliard, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, described and analyzed the sound recording system utilized by that organization. Theodore Hoffman, of the same studios, told of the problems surmounted in "loop synchronization," an important feature in high quality sound reproduction.

Dr. B. Gasper described "The Gaspercolor Process" he devised to produce colorfilms. His technical talk was followed by Dr. Alexander Goetz and F. W. Brown, of the California Institute of Technology, on the effect of graininess in photographic emulsions in scattering light in film. The session concluded with the presentation of a proposed standard for determining the effective speed of photographic objectives, by E. W. Silvertooth, of Paramount Pictures.

Other Technical Experts Participate

Other speakers were R. W. Henderson, Paramount engineering department; John Abbott, Museum of Modern Art Film Library; Lloyd E. Varden, Agfa-Ansco; Lloyd Thompson, Calvin Company; Floyde E. Brooker, United States Office of Education; Alfred N. Goldsmith, theatre engineering committee; D. B. Joy, historical committee; G. A. Chambers, progress committee; Frederick Richards, Warners; Frederick Smith, MGM; C. Dunning, Dunning Process Company; Farciot Eduoard, Paramount; Fred Sersen, Fox; John Fulton, Universal; George Urey, RCA; Herbert Starke, RKO; Harold Burris-Meyer, Stevens Institute; A. L. Holcomb, ERPI; E. C. Manderfield, and F. P. Hernnfeld, ERPI; B. F. Miller, Warners; Edward Plumb, Disney; W. Jones, RCA; W. E. Garity, Disney; H. R. Lubcke, Don Lee System; R. B. Fuller, and L. S. Rhodes, Marsh Cinesound; L. W. O'Connell, ASC; William Offenhauser, Jr., Precision Film Laboratories; H. A. Witt, Wilding Pictures Corporation; H. L. Ryder and H. L. Baumbach, Paramount; J. G. Scott, Eastman; E. E. Masterson, Dr. E. W. Kellogg, L. T. Sachleben.

William C. Kunzmann, convention vice-president, was in charge of arrangements.

R. R. Scoville and G. A. Chambers, of Hollywood, were in charge of the papers program, and C. W. Handley in charge of local arrangements. L. L. Ryder was chairman of the banquet and luncheon committee. C. L. Russell headed the committee in charge of motion picture projection, and O. O. Ceccarini was chairman of the committee in charge of a color-print exhibit.

NATIONAL RELEASE MAY 8th!

Publicists' Guild Pact Signed in New York

Contract Covers 200 Home Office Workers; Studio Writers' Deal Set

Two years' fight for recognition and a closed shop contract by The Screen Publicists Guild in the distributors' New York home offices ended Tuesday afternoon, at the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, when both sides signed the contract. Exceptions were United Artists, which signed on Wednesday, and Warners. The understanding was, at mid-week, that Warners would follow the other distributors.

Meanwhile, the CIO's United Office and Professional Workers of America Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, Local 109, received its first setback, last week, when the Warner Brothers' home office Associated Office Employees of Greater New York voted affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

The CIO union had marched from office to office, winning first representation, and then recognition via National Labor Relations Board elections; and it is now asking contracts at six of the eight major distributors' offices.

William Collins, regional AFL director, said in New York Monday that a separate office employees' charter would shortly be issued to the Warner workers.

The Screen Publicists Guild contract covers approximately 200 advertising and publicity workers, divided, after long negotiation between the guild and majors' personnel departments, into three categories: publicists, associate publicists, and apprentices —for whom, it is understood, the weekly minimum wages are to be $65, $40, and $25 respectively.

Two-Year Deal, Retroactive

The contract runs for two years, and is retroactive to October 1st; this latter facet, it is said, costing the companies about $30,000.

Other companies in addition to Warners, which are to be approached immediately by the guild, for a contract, are Republic, Loew's Theatres, and National Screen Service.

The annual increases are said to total more than $79,000 for the companies which signed.

Present as Joseph Gould, Guild president, signed the contract, were company executives, including Austin Keough, Paramount vice-president and counsel; and Major Leslie Thompson, RKO, chairman of the producers' negotiating committee.

Father John P. Boland, chairman of the New York State Labor Relations Board, termed the agreement a step in the direction "of lifting human relationships to parity with scientific and material advances."

The pact may be reopened after one year, for salary increases. Included in provisions are maintenance of union membership (at least 70 per cent of eligible publicists of each unit are required at all times to be members); a severance pay ranging up to 12 weeks' salary for members employed ten years or more.

Anent the CIO fight to gain control of major's New York white collar workers, industry circles reported last week that Phillip Murray, CIO president, would attend expected contract discussions.

The United Office and Professional Workers of America entrance into organization last week, of managers and assistant managers of northern New Jersey houses, was followed quickly by a declaration from New York headquarters of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, that it, also, was driving to organize such employees.

Writers Guild to Cast Vote

Members of the Screen Writers Guild vote in Hollywood next Monday on a tentative agreement, representing a bargaining contract with the producers, the result of six years' negotiation.

Both sides last year approved in principle the minimum salaries provisions of the agreement; also, those setting up working conditions. Time since then has been occupied with putting the document in legal form.

Ratification by the members will make the agreement effective.

Negotiations continued this week, in New York, between the majors' home offices and the city's projectionists' local, 306, over increased wages for booth men in those offices.

Local 171, Pittsburgh, has had autonomy restored by the IATSE, operating it since 1936. The local was to elect officers Thursday.

The League of New York Theatres, and the porters and cleaners' union, AFL, signed a new contract last week, granting the workers 10 per cent increases in wages. They had asked 20, and threatened to strike.

Subterfuge by the Marcus Loew Booking Agency, RKO Service Corporation, Skouras Theatre Corporation and the Beacon Theatre Corporation to avoid a higher wage scale for projectionists in the Beacon Theatre, New York City is charged in a complaint filed last week by the city's Local 306 and 53 of its projectionists.

Charge 'Conspiracy to Defraud' Union

On the basis of a notification received from the Skouras Circuit in May, 1938, that it had taken over the Beacon, the complaint states, projectionists were supplied on the lower scale paid by that company. Subsequently, the union learned that RKO and Loew's owned two-thirds of the theatre, it is alleged. Contracts between these two companies and the union called for higher wage scales and it is claimed the defendants "conspired to conceal control from the union" and thereby "defrauded" it.

An accounting of the difference in pay and an injunction to compel the defendants to comply with the provisions of their contracts on wage scales is demanded.

WRITERS TO GET $125 MINIMUM

The scale of compensations fixed by the Screen Writers Guild contract now under consideration sets $1,000 as minimum price to be paid, on a deal basis, for script of a Western or action picture, and sets $1,500 as the corresponding minimum for feature photoplays. The week-to-week minimum pay for writers is established at $125 as of a year from date of contract's effectiveness, with, meantime, a minimum of $75 applying to stipulated cases.

The contract provides that studio signatories shall within three months establish an 80 per cent Guild shop, increasing to 85 per cent three months later and, after 2½ years at that level, to 95 per cent for remainder of period covered by pact.

Columbia, Samuel Goldwyn, Loew's, Paramount, RKO-Radio, Republic, Hal Roach, 20th Century-Fox, Universal and Warner Brothers are signatories.

The Philadelphia Film Exchange Employees Union, after several months negotiations, signed new contracts last week, retroactive to Dec. 1st and providing for an average wage increase of three dollars per week for all classifications.

The Philadelphia Theatre Employees Union, comprising ushers, doormen and other service employees, has voted to break its theatre contract. The two-year contract was signed last June, but because of the higher cost of living, wage increases are now sought.

The new Philadelphia Theatre Managers Benevolent Association which started last month with 15 members, now has a membership roll of 50 independent theatre managers, it was announced by Ben Greber, president. Plans are now under way to provide group insurance for the association.

British Confirm Bernstein Post

The British Government this week officially confirmed the appointment of Sidney L. Bernstein, circuit head, to the Ministry of Information Film Division, to be stationed in Washington.

Mr. Bernstein will assist in arranging showings of Ministry films in the United States, and will be a contact between Hollywood studios and the British on films with war themes. He also will assist American producers seeking the collaboration of the British Government.

Gaynor Resigns

Leonard Gaynor, eastern representative of Frank Lloyd Productions, Inc., has resigned, effective May 15th. Mr. Gaynor tendered his resignation immediately following the world premiere for official Washington of Alfred Hitchcock's "Saboteur," which he arranged. The cessation of the Lloyd-Skirball production unit at Universal had been previously announced. Mr. Gaynor has been in charge of the organization's interests in the East.

N. Y. ARBITRATOR RULES OUT SPLIT RUN FOR CIRCUIT

Protection Given Subsequent Run in Award Under Section X of Decree

Protection against the splitting of a run between two theatres of a circuit was guaranteed a subsequent run theatre in New York City this week in the first ruling in that Arbitration Board on a Specific Run case filed under Section X of the consent decree.

The Waverly theatre, in Manhattan's Greenwich Village section won the Section X portion of its complaint when Roscoe S. Conkling, arbitrator, directed 20th Century-Fox, RKO and Warners hereafter to license their pictures to Rugoff and Becker Circuit's Art theatre and 8th Street Playhouse only by separate contract, and without conditioning exhibition at one theatre on exhibition at the other, or at any other theatre belonging to the circuit.

He dismissed portions of the complaint filed under the decree's clearance and some run sections of the decree. Mr. Conkling held that the Luxor-Bleeker Amusement Corporation, operator of the Waverly, had failed to show that the distributors refused some run, and ruled against the clearance demand citing an admission by all parties that the seven day margin prevalent between subsequent Metropolitan New York theatres is generally considered fair.

The award found the distributors had shown favoritism to the Rugoff and Becker interests, prejudicial to the Waverly and contrary to Section X of the decree, when they advanced the Art theatre, after purchase by Rugoff and Becker, to a run ahead of the Waverly. This constituted, Mr. Conkling found, in an arbitrary refusal to license the Waverly to a requested run because of the circuit's larger buying power.

Theatres Not Circuit Operated

The effect of this action, by which distributors granted Rugoff and Becker third city run, first neighborhood run, at either the Art or 8th Street Playhouse, the arbitrator ruled was to move the Waverly back from fourth city (or second Greenwich Village) run to fifth city run (or third in the Village). It also deprived it of those first run (neighborhood) pictures which the Playhouse had previously cancelled out, depriving the Waverly of revenue and causing a product shortage which has forced it to spot book as best it could, the arbitrator found.

The arbitrator ruled that formal operation of a group of 15 theatres or more is not necessary to constitute a circuit under Section X of the decree. Although Rugoff and Becker own the Art and Playhouse, and 15 others through separate corporations, and book some of them separately, Mr. Conkling ruled that they were part of a circuit.

Appeal Board Ruling

The Appeal Board on Friday upheld the award of a Washington arbitrator, John E. Laskey, reducing clearance of the Newport theatre, Norfolk, Va., over the Bayne theatre, Virginia Beach, from 21 to five days. It was the tenth, and only pending Washington case. Warners was the only distributor named.

The action had been appealed by the complainant Bayne-Roland Corporation, who sought elimination of all clearance. The board ruled that there was virtually no direct competition between them but did not change the five day margin.

The Board continued its policy of protecting theatres against delayed booking by stipulating that the Bayne receive pictures not later than 45 days after national release date. Costs were apportioned equally.

APPEAL BOARD URGES NEW CLEARANCE PLAN

A recommendation that the industry coordinate local clearance schedules on a simplified standard was advanced by the chairman of the Appeal Board, Judge Van Vechten Veeder last week as the board held its first oral hearing. Judge Veeder suggested that changing competitive conditions in wartime be used to instigate codification of conflicting clearance systems.

The appeal in the Dickinson theatre case, Kansas City, was taken under advisement by the judges. John Caskey, 20th-Fox counsel and Stanley Thompson, of MGM, for the distributors, argued that the Dickinson award permitted Section XVII to be used to upset all existing clearance standards. They declared that in decree negotiations with the Department of Justice distributors had received explicit exemption for the clearances granted affiliate theatres.

H. C. Boatwright, of Kansas City, who appeared for the Dickinson, asked for a liberal interpretation of the decree to protect independents against "special privileges" for affiliated houses.

New York

The 35th New York case was filed Friday by the Stilson Realty Corporation, operating the Cameo theatre, Astoria, Long Island. A clearance demand, it named All Five and the Hobart theatre, Interboro Circuit house in Woodside. The complaint asserts that there is no competition involved and asks elimination of the seven day margin held by the Hobart.

An appeal was filed Friday at New York in the 21st case by Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., Skouras affiliate. Their clearance complaint in behalf of the Ogden theatre, the Bronx, against Paramount and MGM was dismissed by Lionel S. Popkin. His decision was reported in Motion Picture Herald for April 18th, page 43.

Kansas City

A fifth case was filed at Kansas City on May 1st by Simon Galitzki, operator of the Coed theatre, Topeka, Kan., against All Five. The complaint charges that the theatre now must wait up to 148 days after Topeka first run and asks a maximum of 60 days clearance. The Coed was named in the fourth Kansas action, filed by the Cozy theatre, also of Topeka.

New Haven

At New Haven, Salvatore Adorno, operator of the College Open-Air Theatre, Middletown, Conn., has withdrawn his "some run" complaint against All Five, filed on June 27, 1941. This case, No. 4, has been postponed several times by the complainant. He now states that his sons who assist him in the operation of the Open-Air are in the Army or in defense work, and he is unable to continue. Mr. Adorno complained that he could buy no product.

The date for filing of the distributors' reply briefs has been extended to May 11th in the complaint of John Cannon, operator of the Grand, New Haven. Wyllis Newcomb, attorney for the distributors in this matter, is engaged in Detroit and several continuances have been granted him. The Arbitrator, Leonard S. Horner, promised early disposal of the matter. It is New Haven's sixth case, and the only pending action.

St. Louis

The St. Louis Amusement Company has intervened in the clearance complaints of the Princess and Beverly theatres in St. Louis, cases No. 9 and 10.

The Princess says the clearance maintained by Gravois, Amusement Company house, is unreasonable. Community Theatre Corporation, operators of the Beverly, is seeking better clearance over the amusement company-owned Victory and Wellston. The Tivoli and Shady Oak, also owned by the chain, are named as interested parties.

Chicago

Hearings on the Freeport theatre, Freeport, Ill., case opened on April 30th and have been going on continuously since. Arthur J. Goldberg, Chicago lawyer, is arbitrator. The case, Number 15, is the first at Chicago asking for a specific run.

The complainants, Steve, Leo and Joseph Bennis, claim that Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Warners and Paramount have refused to license their features on the run requested by the Freeport because of preferred licenses to the Patio theatre, Freeport, Ill., operated by the Publix-Great States circuit.

The Oriental theatre, Chicago, case No. 6, has again been postponed until June 2nd. The Times theatre, Danville, Ill., case has been moved up to May 11th.

The 12th Chicago case, clearance action of the Annetta theatre, Cicero, will be heard May 25th before James Sprowl.

Buffalo

At Buffalo Wednesday in Case No. 9, Joseph M. Boehm, ordered Warners, Paramount, RKO and MGM to cut the clearance granted the Family theatre, Batavia, N. Y., over the Astor, operated at Attica by Vincent Martina, from 30 to 14 days.

In the 10th case William E. Barrett dismissed the clearance action of Caroline Periello for the Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y., against All Five and the Ohman Brothers and Schine circuits' theatre in Newark and Lyons, N. Y. Costs were dividde equally in both cases.

All-night Shows for "Gold Rush" in New York

Charlie Chaplin's "The Gold Rush," which entered its third week last Saturday at the Globe Theatre, New York, has created such "demand for admittance to the theatre," that the management has decided to keep the house open until five o'clock Sunday mornings to accommodate weekend patrons, according to an announcement this week from United Artists which is distributing the Chaplin reissue.

LETTERS FROM READERS

WOMEN IN THEATRE OPERATION DEPARTMENT

The Herald's article on women in the motion picture theatre, written by Jeannette Samuelson in the issue of April 11, seems now by way of correspondence to be about to grow into a department. It is probable that women have figured in theatre operation longer and more widely than any of the letter writers have so far indicated.—THE EDITOR.

April 27, 1942

Miss Jeannette E. Samuelson:

I read with great interest your original article in the April 11th issue of Motion Picture Herald and again the two letters from Rex Van Horn and Ralph W. Weir in the April 25th issue about women projectionists and claims about the first woman projectionist in the United States.

I recall that while a high school boy in Siler City, North Carolina, and much interested in the talking pictures by virtue of being a "general nuisance" around the local Gem Theatre, my Sunday school class took a bus trip to the western part of our State.

On the return trip from Asheville we spent a night in Forest City, North Carolina, one of the more beautiful North Carolian towns. Before retiring for the night I visited both theatres in Forest City at that time, (the summer of 1929 or 1930; I do not remember the exact year).

I was allowed to visit the booth of the smaller of the two Forest City houses and much to my surprise I found a very attractive young lady operating the machines. There were chintz curtains on the booth windows and the lady projectionist was attired in a print smock. Her name I do not recall, but oddly enough I do recall the sound equipment in the booth as DeForest, the same as in the Siler City Gem at that time. At the larger theatre in Forest City I was not permitted to visit the booth but the very polite manager was a lady, whose name I also do not remember. Neither do I remember the names of either of the Forest City theatres.

Since that is the only time I have ever been in Forest City the matter had almost slipped from my memory 'til reminded by your article. I am sure that inquiries in Forest City, North Carolina, will reveal that the lady projectionist in the smaller of the two Forest City houses was the first woman projectionist in the United States.—W. F. SHELTON, House Mgr., Louisburg Theatre, Louisburg, N. C.

To the Editor of the Herald:

Regarding the argument as to the women projectionists I have just been informed by one of my operators that there was a woman projectionist employed here in Atlanta at the extinct Alamo No. 1 Theatre 25 years ago. My operator does not know her name, but states she is the sister of Mr. Fred Raoul, an official of the American Federation of Labor.

In giving me this information my operator also added the fact that this woman was very efficient.—

'MORALE' AD IS THEATRE TRAILER

To the Editor of the Herald:

The advertising firm of Donahue & Coe certainly deserves a pat on the back for their swell gesture to our business in the publication of that ad entitled Morale is Mightier Than the Sword, as reproduced on page 48 of the April 25th issue of Motion Picture Herald.

Down here at the Capitol we are using a part of the copy as a special institutional screen trailer and we have also written Donahue & Coe for proofs of the ad with the intention of having same blown up to 40x60 for lobby display.

It seems that the industry is missing a bet if they don't take advantage of this swell copy to insert similar ads in newspapers throughout the country.

Selling movies to the public in this manner will do more to bring paying customers to the box office than all the fancy ads of the past which have been trying to sell Sallie Glutch and what she eats and what she does.

Washington Houses Sold

John Danz, head of Sterling Circuit theatres, announced last week the sale of his Empire and Island theatres in Anacortes, Wash., to O. M. Durham, a former exhibitor.

Appeals Board Cuts Clearance

The Appeal Board in its 23rd decision Wednesday reduced to one day a Buffalo award cutting the clearance of Shea's Kensington theatre, Buffalo, over the Bailey theatre from seven to three days. In its opinion the Board scored All Five distributors for increasing clearance over the Bailey after the Shea circuit relinquished Bailey's operation to the Dipson Theatre Corporation.

Stating that they were in complete accord with the justice of the Bailey plea for a restoration of the status it held when operated by the Circuit, the Appeal Board found that under the Section VIII of the decree they were powerless to alter run and could only reduce clearance to one day.

It dismissed Paramount and Loew's from the action.

Two New Trust Actions Filed By Independents

Neither the decree nor its proposed changes, neither arbitration nor war, halts the flow of anti-trust suits against the major distributors and their affiliated theatre companies. This week, two more entered the books: one affecting Miami, the other in Philadelphia.

In the latter city's Federal Court, on Thursday, April 30th, Joseph Conway, operator of the suburban Egyptian Theatre, filed suit against Warners, Paramount, RKO, Universal, Fox, Columbia, United Artists, and Warner Theatres. He asks damages in excess of $10,000 per year since 1938, amounting to triple damages of $120,000 under the Sherman Act. He alleges Warners circuit used "cross-clearance" on its Wynne and Ardmore theatres to deprive the Egyptian of product, and also that product was taken from Harry Freed's Seville into his Suburban Theatre disregarding the Egyptian clearance. Mr. Freed is not a party to the suit, however.

The court is asked to declare illegal the zoning, clearance, and protection favoring the Wynne, Ardmore, and Suburban.

Mr. Conway is a national director of the Allied States Association.

The eight major companies and Monogram Pictures Corp. were named defendants last week in an anti-trust suit filed in the New York Federal Court, charging them with the creation of a monopoly in the greater Miami area and particularly the Negro sections of that area by unfairly favoring the Wometco and Paramount circuits. The suit, brought by J. P. Benitoa and Josephina Fernandez Benitoa, operators of the Modern Theatre in Miami and the Liberty in nearby Liberty City, demands unspecified treble damages, a ruling that film contracts with the two circuits are illegal, and an injunction against alleged monopolistic acts.

Chief grievance expressed in the complaint is that the plaintiffs' two houses are subject to 150 days clearance granted to the Wometco circuit with the result that the latter's first, second and third run houses play all films first. Plaintiffs claim that they operate "first rate Negro houses" well located for business but that the "excessive clearance" imposed upon them has caused a continuous operating loss.

New Orleans Imperial Has 20th Anniversary

The Imperial theatre, in the downtown section of New Orleans, celebrated its 20th anniversary April 30th. Operated by Rene J. Brunet, the Imperial is one of the oldest independent film theatres operated under the original management. Mr. Brunet has been in the business for 30 years. The theatre has been remodeled four times since its opening in 1922.

The anniversary program included a Mack Sennett comedy with Ben Turpin, Marie Prevost, Louise Fazenda and other old time favorites, accompanied by the same pianist who featured the film when it was run at the theatre 20 years ago. There was ice cream and cake for all attending and a 30-pound American flag birthday cake given from the stage.

Service Aluminum Reels With New Process

National Theatre Supply Company has a new service for the straightening and repairing of aluminum reels. In welding the cracks on the broken reels, additional material is used to strengthen the reel so that there is very little chance of the crack breaking again. For the straightening of reels a special process is used.

The new service is said to make it possible for theatres to get prolonged and satisfactory use from damaged reels. It is expected to aid in the conservation of aluminum since most 2,000 ft. reels are made of this metal.

'Moontide' Bows at N. Y. Rivoli

Breaking Broadway's tradition of gala premieres, "Moontide," 20th Century-Fox film which marks Jean Gabin's introduction in an American picture, opened at the Rivoli last Wednesday night without the customary accompaniment of klieg and floodlights to illuminate its debut. The opening occurred on the first night of the Army-ordered dim-outs in New York and other Eastern coast cities to protect American shipping along the Atlantic.

The premiere, sponsored by the American Theatre Wing War Service which operates Stage Door Canteen and other services for uniformed men, netted approximately $3,000, it was reported, for the Wing's fund. The affair was an elaborate one, attracting a gathering of screen, stage and society celebrities who filled the Rivoli to capacity, it was said. Jean Gabin who co-stars in "Moontide" with Ida Lupino, was on hand for the opening.

"The Dictator" will have its first public showing in Brazil at a debut held May 14th, at the United Artists-Opera Theatre in Sao Paulo, with entire proceeds of the performance to be divided equally among the Brazilian, American and British Red Cross agencies, it was announced by United Artists in New York on Tuesday.

MGM reports that "Ship Ahoy" opened to "outstanding business" last Friday at the Aldine, Wilmington. The new Metro musical stars Eleanor Powell, Red Skelton and Tommy Dorsey and his orchestra. MGM also announced first key city engagements for "Tortilla Flat," starring Spencer Tracy, Hedy Lamarr and John Garfield. The screen version of John Steinbeck's novel opened at the State, Houston on Wednesday night, with premieres the following day at Loew's, Richmond, and the State, Norfolk. On Friday, it started a run at the State, Cleveland; May 13th, the Aldine, Wilmington; May 14th, State, Providence, May 20th, Fifth Avenue, Seattle and May 21st, Palace, Albany.

New Documentary

United Nations Films, Inc., a new documentary producing company, was formed in New York this week with offices at 1790 Broadway. The company will produce a feature length documentary tentatively titled "The Story of an Isolationist." According to a company spokesman, the picture will be shot in New York. Half of its contents will be newsreel war material and the rest reenacted scenes. Officers of United Nations Films were not divulged. The film will be ready for release within two months, it was said. Alois Englander will produce, and Hans Burger will direct.

RCA Reports Gain for First Quarter

Net profit, after taxes, of the Radio Corporation of America for the first quarter of 1942 was $2,030,988, David Sarnoff, president, announced Tuesday at the annual meeting of stockholders held in a studio of the National Broadcasting Company at Rockefeller Center, New York. This figure of net profit compared with $1,922,174 for the same period last year, and represented an increase of $108,814 or six per cent.

Mr. Sarnoff pointed out that until the proposed 1942 tax law is enacted, the exact amount of the company's tax liability, and therefore, its net profit, cannot be determined finally. Provision for Federal taxes on 1942 income, he said, is necessarily tentative at this time.

Consolidated gross business of RCA during the first quarter of the present year amounted to $44,541,395 compared with $32,576,073 in the first quarter of last year, an increase of $11,965,322 or 37 per cent. Because of the increase in the volume of business, and in anticipation of higher tax rates, the provision for Federal taxes for the first quarter this year was 2½ times as great as first quarter taxes last year.

Provision for Federal taxes for the first quarter of 1942 amounts to $5,853,700, compared with Federal taxes for the first quarter a year ago which were $2,307,000. This represents an increase in RCA's Federal tax provision for the first quarter of this year of $3,546,700 or 154 per cent.

Stressing the great duty that radio is being called upon to play in the war, Mr. Sarnoff called attention to the fact that peace-time standards for progress and success can no longer be safely relied upon in many cases. He said that to win the war as quickly as possible is the single purpose which now controls the nation, the individual and the business organization.

He said: "The safety of a company can never rise higher than its source, which is the safety of the nation. Therefore, until we win the war no individual, no business, no investment is secure. Today, the worth of a business must be measured in service, not in dollars."

Montreal Theatre Company Reports on 1941 Gains

The financial statement of Confederation Amusements Limited, Montreal, for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1941 shows an improvement in operating revenues, in total income and in net profits, the last after considerably increased taxes. The balance sheet shows a comfortable working capital position, current assets of $133,623, exceeding current liabilities by $94,449.

Theatre revenue at $565,117 compared with $486,686 for 1940 and after all charges, including taxes, depreciation, general expenses, etc., and after crediting miscellaneous income, net profit at $37,200 compared with $35,361 in 1940. This net was equal to 6.93 per cent on the 8 per cent preferred.

Pollock Places Conductor With Chicago Symphony

Louis Pollock, formerly eastern advertising and publicity manager for Universal, has signed Robert Stolz, Viennese composer-conductor, and will present him conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Civic Opera House in Chicago, May 29 and 30.

Mr. Stolz was musical director of the "Theatre an der Wien" in Vienna before the Anchluss. He is the composer of "White Horse Inn" and "Two Hearts in Three Quarter Time," among others, and composed the score of Universal's "Spring Parade," starring Deanna Durbin.

Calls Radio Law "Outmoded"

Present radio laws are outmoded, Frank E. Mullen, vice-president of the National Broadcasting Company, told the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Tuesday. New legislation is desirable, he said, but it should "envisage the future in a nation at peace."

Mr. Mullen appeared before the committee in support of the Sanders bill to reorganize the Federal Communications Commission, and emphasized his testimony by a number of colored slides depicting the outstanding facts regarding the broadcasting structure, the part played by the networks in the national picture and some of the technical problems involved in the placement of stations.

Pointing out that the United States had 425 receivers per 1,000 population as compared with 62 receivers per thousand in the Axis countries, Mr. Mullen said, "A free radio supported by private enterprise, free from Government subsidy or ownership, is one of our democratic bulwarks.

"A combination of science, art and sound business management has given to the public and American business a national broadcasting service without an equal," he said.

Mr. Mullen confined himself to a review of the broadcasting structure, leaving discussion of the legal points of the bill to John Cahill, counsel, who was unable to appear at that hearing.

Miller of NAB Recalled

Prior to hearing Mr. Mullen, the committee recalled Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, who testified April 16th, in order that Representative Sanders of Louisiana might question him regarding provisions in the bill calling for adoption of a Congressional policy on newspaper ownership and the licensing and limiting of networks.

Mr. Miller said that the fundamental principles of newspapers ownership and chain operation "should be laid down by Congress" and said that the FCC had attempted to deal with those problems without definite statutory authority for its actions.

Mr. Miller declined to discuss the question of newspaper ownership in detail, but said representatives of the newspaper stations would appear for that purpose. The newspaper group is scheduled to be heard May 19th.

Mr. Mullen also discussed those phases but only in broad terms, testifying that the newspapers have done a "magnificent job" in running stations. "I do not believe that broadcasting would have made its way in the early days without the help of the press," he said.

Smith Heads Universal Studio Publicity

Lou Smith this week was named Universal studio publicity head by John Joseph, director of advertising and publicity. Mr. Smith recently left a similar post at Columbia.

Also added to the studio staff were J. W. Dailey, formerly of Columbia, and Paul Speegle, formerly on the San Francisco Chronicle, the latter replacing Jack Rosenstein, who is now with Warners.

Publicity Heads Weigh Plan for Audience Poll

A scientific study of film audiences and their preferences in advertising, billing, and motion picture attendance habits is under discussion by the heads of publicity departments for the major companies. The topic was suggested at a meeting of the Publicity Directors Committee, Eastern Branch, last week.

Members of the committee are now studying the possibility, and according to Glen Allvine, executive secretary, they will submit suggestions on topics of general industry interest, and possible detailed questions for such an audience poll, at their next meeting. Several national research organizations and consumer groups have submitted prospectuses to the committee, it was reported. No formal action has been taken, however.

Events' Calendar Proving Valuable

Mr. Allvine reported that distributors were taking increasing advantage of the committee calendar of coming events to register trade showings, special screenings and the dates for other events with the committee. The service is planned to prevent duplications.

On Tusday MGM posted notice of 16 screenings, extending as far ahead as June 4th. This is the largest, and most extended schedule of events filed by any of the major companies to date, Mr. Allvine said. The screenings cover showings for fan magazines, trade press, review organizations and consent decree exhibitor trade showings.

A national press mailing list of several thousand names, prepared by the studio branch of the publicity committee, has arrived at New York and is in process of further checking, Mr. Allvine disclosed. The list which embraces film reviewers, columnists, some radio commentators, drama editors, and others likely to be interested in motion picture news or exploitation is being sent to the majors' home offices.

Each company is at liberty to augment its own mailing lists from the master list of the publicity committee, and they are also being asked to add to the common register. The list will eventually form a general register of industry press contacts, Mr. llvine said, and it will be kept as nearly up to date as possible.

Accurate Press Lists Needed

The executive secretary of the publicity group said there is particular need of accurate press listings at present in order to prevent wastage of mats, postage, and the sizable amounts of paper used for film releases. It is reported that the committee may also undertake a study of the reception afforded film releases in newspaper offices, and offer its findings to all companies to supplement the reports of their field men.

Further discussion of the use of critics' star ratings is scheduled for the next meeting of the Eastern group on Thursday. Last week the committee asked the Brandt theatres to abandon use of critics' stars to advertise Chaplin's "Gold Rush" at the Globe theatre in New York. It is understood that the theatre has not answered the protest.

The RKO and Loew circuits on Monday carried critic star ratings in their metropolitan copy for "Fantasia" and "The Invaders." RKO denied that the copy used critic ratings, asserting that it merely described the picture as a "four star attraction."

Foreign Publicists Meet in N. Y.

Expansion of the activities of the International Film Relations committee, to include a regular international motion picture news letter and feature service in behalf of the industry is in prospect, it was reported following a meeting of the group of foreign publicity managers at New York on Monday. The program would be worked out on an institutional basis in cooperation with studio foreign publicity chiefs.

Albert Deane, of Paramount, chairman of the eastern group, reported that the Monday session voted to continue its contributions to foreign short wave broadcasts. The series, sent to Latin America, Europe and the Far East, is now in its 150th week. The committee also voted continuing cooperation with the U. S. Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, the Coordinator of Information and other government agencies, foreign newspapers and magazines.

Bookers Club Sets Benefit

The Motion Picture Bookers Club of New York will hold its annual affair at the Hotel Astor, Sunday, May 10th. The proceds will be used for the benefit of former members now serving in the armed forces. Bernie Brooks, chief buyer and booker for the Fabian Circuit, is president of the organization.

Reelect Biechele KMTOA Head

R. R. Biechele was reelected president of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre owners Association at the concluding session of the organization's two day convention in Kansas City last week. Tom Edwards was elected vice-president and Fred Meyn secretary-treasurer.

Directors elected for Kansas are Homer Strowig, J. C. Pennington and H. J. Griffith. Missouri directors elected are C. A. Schultz, George W. Hartmann and C. E. Cook.

A motion was carried to dissolve the Kansas Independent Theatre Association and join the KMTOA. A conciliation committee was appointed to handle grievance of exhibitors in both Kansas and Missouri.

Because of the confusion on war activities, the convention adopted a resolution to verify the authenticity of any drive for funds before contributing. A motion to place KMTOA on record as against showing Lew Ayres' pictures was lost.

Among the speakers were Stephen Shoup of the War Production Board, Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and David Palfreyman of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

BLAZING SIX SHOOTER: Charles Starrett, Iris Meredith—The usual western fare; good for weekends. Running time, 60 minutes.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

CAFE HOSTESS: Preston Foster, Ann Dvorak—Fair programmer to be used on double bill. Will not stand up alone. Running time, 62 minutes.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

HARMON OF MICHIGAN: Tommy Harmon, Anita Louise—This was a good football film that should do good business. It failed for us because most of our younger men are in the service. Running time, 66 minutes.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

MAN FROM TUMBLEWEEDS, THE: Bill Elliot, Irish Meredith—These westerns are well liked here. They have plenty of action and that is what our patrons want. Running time, 60 minutes.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF DANIEL BOONE, THE: Bill Elliott, Betty Miles—A fairly good western. Elliott is very reminiscent of old William Hart. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

THREE GIRLS ABOUT TOWN: Joan Blondell, John Howard—Sophisticated comedy that was not liked here. Lost heavy on this one. Running time, 72 minutes.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Henry Fonda, Barbara Stanwyck—Good sophisticated comedy that was well liked here. Running time, 97 minutes. Played April 6-8.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANDY HARDY'S PRIVATE SECRETARY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Ann Rutherford—Played this late, but my patrons did not think that this was up to the standard of the series, lacking the music and action that are so entertaining in the Rooney pictures. Running time, 116 minutes. Played April 18th.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

BITTER SWEET: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, George Sanders — This team is definitely through, in our opinion. Many unfavorable comments and the writer agreed with most of them. May be all right for cosmopolitan areas, but certainly the residents of a mining community need more than warbling and bellowing sans acting to satisfy them. Running time, 94 minutes. Played April 23-24.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can. Mining community patronage.

GET-AWAY, THE: Robert Sterling, Charles Winninger—Good picture.—Played April 14-16.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

H. M. PULHAM, ESQ.: Hedy Lamarr, Robert Young—Good picture, slow at times and rather long. Not too good for small towns but will get by. Some like it and others do not. Business fair. Played April 4-6.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

H. M. PULHAM, ESQ.: Hedy Lamarr, Robert Young, Ruth Hussey—It is a well done love drama, but is inclined to be too long and talkie for my bunch. Those who came said they liked it, but it had very poor draw. Box office was way below average. It just would not "Pulham" in. Running time, 119 minutes. Played April 23.—W. Varick Nevins III. Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

KATHLEEN: Shirley Temple, Herbert Marshall, Laraine Day—Good picture that pleased those who came. Shirley does not have the draw any more. Shirley performed nicely assisted by a good cast.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

TWO-FACED WOMAN: Greta Garbo, Melvyn Douglas, Constance Bennett—Fair picture and fair business. Running time, 94 minutes. Played April 19-20.—E. M. Freiburger. Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Monogram

BORROWED HERO: Alan Baxter, Florence Rice—Fast-moving gangster film. Good double-bill picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 26.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

I KILLED THAT MAN: Ricardo Cortez, Joan Woodbury—Good for double feature bill. Runing time, 71 minutes. Played April 5.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

MAN FROM HEADQUARTERS: Frank Albertson, Joan Woodbury—A catch title. Running time, 67 minutes. Played April 19.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

Paramount

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Carolyn Lee, Rochester—Just a mighty good show. As the trailer said, Bing is in there wringing and twisting. Plenty of good songs and the story is pretty fair. Mary Martin is good, so is Brian Donlevy. In fact, the whole cast is good. Played April 18-20.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

BORDER VIGILANTES: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—Fine action picture. Excellent draw. Running time, 61 minutes. Played April 21.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

HOLD BACK THE DAWN: Charles Boyer, Olivia de Havilland—Good picture which pleased the midweek patrons. Starts off o.k. and continues to hold interest all through the picture. Good acting by entire cast. Played April 7-9.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE: Bob Hope, Vera Zorina, Victor Moore—Not as good business as "Caught in the Draft," but much better than 'Nothing But the Truth." Running time, 98 minutes. Played April 9-11.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Republic

LADY FOR A NIGHT: Joan Blondell, John Wayne—Good picture but not for Friday and Saturday. Pleased generally. Business below average. Played April 10-11.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

MISSOURI OUTLAW, A: Don "Red" Barry—This, in my opinion, is the best Barry production to date, plenty of action and good supporting cast. The dog in this show helps some also. Played April 17-18.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite Okla. Small town patronage.

UNDER FIESTA STARS: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Carol Hughes—Dear Mr. Autry: I have consistently in this magazine boosted your product as first-class entertainment for the rural community, but having just run "Under Fiesta Stars," what a fiasco. The poorest one of your series. The patrons come to the small town theatre to hear you sing, not to see you act. This release was lacking in music. You had better again introduce Mary Lee in your releases and more popular cowboy songs. To the exhibitor, I could not recommend this one. It will do you more harm than good. Running time, 58 minutes. Played April 18.—A. L. Dove. Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

MY FAVORITE WIFE: Cary Grant, Irene Dunne—We picked up this old feature for our break-up period (when all transportation is non-existent), and consider this was one of the best comedies that we have ever shown. Our audiences howled and rolled in the aisles. We got a good print, too. Even though it is old, it is still good and we highly recommend it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 16-17.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre. Bissett, Manitoba, Cann. Mining community patronage.

SUSPICION: Cary Grant, Joan Fontaine—A very good picture that drew better than average, thanks to the Academy Award. An abundance of suspense is built on dialogue rather than action, which relegated the picture to a first-of-the-week date for this location. Running time, 99 minutes. Played April 6-8.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BLUE, WHITE AND PERFECT: Lloyd Nolan, Mary Beth Hughes—Program picture which drew average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 21.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

CONFIRM OR DENY: Don Ameche, Joan Bennett—We were agreeably surprised with this after seeing

so many bad reports. The title was senseless and Ameche overacted just enough to take the edge off the picture, but at that it is a good average program picture that went by without complaint. Business average. Played April 17-18.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

DEAD MEN TELL: Sidney Toler—A good Chan feature. Well-liked here. Running time, 60 minutes. —Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

HOW GREEN WAS MY VALLEY: Roddy McDowall, Walter Pidgeon—Very fine picture that deserved all the credits it got. Did better than average business for us, which is not very much since the war, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all. One of those pictures that is discussed wherever people gather. Our volume of business nowadays does not permit us to show a profit with 40 per cent pictures. Something must be done about these rentals. Played April 5-7.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

REMEMBER THE DAY: Claudette Colbert, John Payne—Very nice feature that our patrons enjoyed. Business was below average as this type of picture is not popular with our folks and neither is Claudette Colbert. She is very good in this and so is Payne but his voice registered poorly with the print we had. Played March 22-24.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

REMEMBER THE DAY: Claudette Colbert, John Payne—Ran this with "Appointment for Love," and thought I had an extra good show, but business was only average. This picture is certainly excellent and a good length for its story. The audience was enthusiastic about it. Older people will like it, especially for the memories it will bring up. First warm summer weather probably hurt the receipts some. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 24-25.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

RIDE ON VAQUERO: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes—This is the first time the Cisco Kid let us down. Can't understand it as it was one of his best shows. Running time, 60 minutes.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

ROXIE HART: Ginger Rogers, George Montgomery —Well now here is really something to wonder about. The general sentiment was "bad." Yet taking it for what it is meant to be there is quite a bit of entertainment there. Anyway the adolescent gals got a big kick out of it and did better than average business. It held up better than average for the three days so a good many of them must have liked it. Played April 12-14.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

ROXIE HART: Ginger Rogers—Most people liked this picture and business was good. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 22-23.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SWAMP WATER: Walter Brennan, Walter Huston —Plenty good picture with Walter Brennan turning in another good performance. The rest of the cast is also good. Should do well in small town. Played April 21-23.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Jane Withers—Good picture which pleased the kids on Friday-Saturday. Running time, 73 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey. Okla. Small town patronage.

Universal

APPOINTMENT FOR LOVE: Charles Boyer, Margaret Sullavan—Ran this with "Rember the Day" to average box-office, probably due to first summery weather. They should be amused at the goings-on in this light comedy but probably the draw is not too strong. Some parts are very funny. Avertise it as such. Running time, 89 minutes. Played April 24-25. —W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

BADLANDS OF DAKOTA: Robert Stack, Ann Rutherford, Richard Dix, Frances Farmer—One of the better westerns. Runing time, 74 minutes. Played April 19.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

HIRED WIFE: Rosalind Russell, Brian Aherne, Virginia Bruce. Robert Benchley—Very good comedy and greatly pleased all who saw it. Played to a near capacity house. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 9-10.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can. Mining community patronage.

IT STARTED WITH EVE: Deanna Durbin, Charles Laughton, Robert Cummings, Guk Kibbee—Deanna Durbin's string of "hits" has not been broken, even though the theme of this picture is the old "Cinderella" type. Charles Laughton again comes to the fore with an excellent performance as an irascible millionaire who refuses to die. Youthful Robert Cummings does a creditable job as Laughton's wayward son who is finally taught to mend his ways by the ever refreshing Deanna Durbin. Laughton's comedy and Deanna's singing highlight this picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 11.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

" . . . I consider it a privilege to be able to contribute to your valued magazine even in so small a capacity.

"And I also appreciate the opportunity you afford me to pat the producer on the back when he hits the jackpot for me and to let him know when I think he is wasting my money —although, happily, the latter occasions are very rare.

"By carefully avoiding any temptation to use your excellent Department for the purpose of grinding any personal axes, and by conscientious reporting with the above object in view I earnestly believe that this is the first step toward inter-industry consultations and understanding which I advocated in the last Herald Poll."—
DELMAR C. FOX, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can.

YOU'RE NOT SO TOUGH: Dead End Kids—Their shows are all alike, some wisecracks and slapping each other all over the lot, so that our patrons have lost all interest in their shows. The kids still like them. Running time, 71 minutes.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

BLUES IN THE NIGHT: Priscilla Lane, Richard Whorf—After being afflicted with the theme song of this production too long on the radio there was no reason to expect more than the handful we got. Such patrons of this form of "music" as attended seemed well satisfied, however. Running time, 88 minutes. Played April 15-16.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray —An excellent picture that was completely ruined by the worst print we have ever seen. This print was so badly scratched that you could not distinguish the actors at times. A disgrace to the industry. Only average business as our patrons are refusing aviation and war pictures. Some don't come at all any more and others stay away from all war features. Played March 29-31.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy—Good picture, but too many air sequences get monotonous. Running time, 132 minutes. Played March 29-31.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER: Bette Davis, Monty Woolley—This excellent production was well received even by our people, most of whom have no speaking acquaintance with Broadway stage plays. Running time, 112 minutes.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

NAVY BLUES: Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie, Martha Raye, Jack Haley—Our audience was highly pleased with this comedy. Jack Oakie, Jack Haley, Martha Raye and Ann Sheridan have extended their talents to a "hit." The newcomer, Jack Carson, was particularly noted for a good supporting role and we hope to see him again. No need to fear the "box-office blues" with this one. Running time, 110 minutes. Played April 4.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison Theatre, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SERGEANT YORK: Gary Cooper, Joan Leslie—You all know about this excellent picture. We had put off showing it because we felt it was not entitled to advanced admissions and after showing it we still think so. Many of our folks cannot pay admission prices like this and they stayed away, also kept their kids home, so we judge they may have resented the increase. Business was a little less than we had expected but was all right. Played April 19-21.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho.

STRANGE ALIBI: Arthur Kennedy, Joan Perry—Good action picture. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 12.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

THEY DIED WITH THEIR BOOTS ON: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland—An excellent picture that was harmed by a bad title. Business was under average as the title was misleading. Everyone that came was pleased. A really outstanding feature. Played March 15-17.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

WILD BILL HICKOK RIDES: Bruce Cabot, Constance Bennett, Warren William—This was made with the obvious intention of eliminating triple-bills by the simple expedient of incorporating into one picture all the cliches known to the business, and maybe a few ideas never thought of before, although it all happened so fast I couldn't say for sure. Starting with the Chicago Fire, it warmed up from there at a pace that had my action fans pop-eyed for fear they would miss a killin'. Very good business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 2-4.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

WILD BILL HICKOK RIDES: Constance Bennett, Bruce Cabot—Entirely too much shooting and killing. It goes completely out of bounds. Our folks did not care for it and most of the women stayed away. Played March 20-21.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: Another in the series of glimpses at the stars, but noteworthy because it brings back some of the deceased bygones to our sight. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

FIRST SWALLOW, THE: Technicolor Cartoons —Good color cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GOING TO PRESS: Our Gang Comedies—Amusing one-reel comedy. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Paramount

LITTLE LAMBKIN: Color Classics—Good color cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PIPEYE, PUPEYE, POOPEYE AND PEEPEYE: Popeye the Sailor—Average Popeye cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SUPERMAN NO. 1: Superman Color Cartoons—I made a mistake when I did not run this "Superman" first; it explains "how he got that way" and isn't so much of a shock. Anyway, "Superman" is catching on here. Running time, 10 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox. Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

BATTLEFIELDS OF THE PACIFIC: March of Time Special—A hodge-podge of previous issues, most of which I had never seen before. But assuming that the commentary was also taken from the original issues, this Special struck me as being an "I told you so!" A good average for this fine series. Running time, 18 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

BATTLEFIELDS OF THE PACIFIC: March of Time Special—Shots taken from four old March of Times. This is a very interesting subject, especially so in view of the action now taking place in that area. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can. Mining community patronage.

GENTLEMAN'S GENTLEMAN, A: Walt Disney Cartoons—A very good cartoon and above the average Disney. Play it for laughs. Running time, 9 minutes.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can. Mining community patronage.

GOOD TIME FOR A DIME, A: Walt Disney Cartoons—Another highly pleasing cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can. Mining community patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 7: "Far East Command"—A very timely subject with some very fine shots of the Japanese Army in action, also information of our neighbors, the Australians and New Zealanders. By all means, play this series in all small town theatres. Running time, 16 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

SHAM BATTLE SHENANIGANS: Terrytoons—A crazy color cartoon that got some laughs and satisfied. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

SNOW TRAILS: Sports Review—Average travel talk, made in Sun Valley. Running time, 10 minutes. —E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Universal

JUMPIN' JIVE: Musical—Still another idea in presenting a novelty short! This time it combines an agents' woes with an excellent cast of variety artists. Just a good short and a good booking. Running time, 17 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

WOODY WOODPECKER: Color Cartoon—An animated cartoon that is a good spot short. As a change from the usual run of novelties, this is a welcome addition. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Vitaphone

HORTON HATCHES THE EGG: Merrie Melodies Cartoons—Here is a full reel of very different color cartooning. My bunch thought it was excellent and applauded it at the end. That is unusual. Any audience should get laughs out of it, but it is most noteworthy in its sly cuteness. Running time, 10 minutes. —W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

JOE REICHMAN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Good musical reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RODEO ROUNDUP: Sports Parade—An enlargement from a 16mm. colored reel that is technically tops. Very interesting, too, especially out here where we don't think the aeroplane will ever replace the horse. Running time, 10 minutes. Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Jersey Court Rules Bank Night Lottery

The Court of Errors and Appeals, in Trenton, New Jersey's highest tribunal of law, voted unanimously last week in support of a lower court decision branding Bank Night a lottery and a violation of the State Constitution. "We have no hesitation in holding that the procedure (Bank Night) was an unlawful 'lottery' in the constitutional statutory sense," the court said in an opinion written by 79-year-old Justice Charles W. Parker.

The ruling supported Circuit Court Judge William A. Smith in dismissing a suit against the A. & G. Amusement Co., operator of the Majestic Theatre, Patterson, N. J., for $1,140 for the privilege of using Bank Night as an attraction. The suit was brought by William Furst, Newark, N. J., lawyer, as the assignee of the affiliated enterprises, a Colorado corporation controlling the rights to Bank Night.

Judge Smith had held the contract had been based on a lottery and therefore was not enforceable.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BOB WILE, Editor
GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

BONDS! STAMPS!

ALONG with our shows from now on, we showmen of the U. S. A. are going to sell War Bonds and Stamps. That means two lines of merchandise, one made of shadows on the screen, the other patriotic pieces of paper, but both addressed at the emotions of the audience.

The pictures deliver entertainment—escape for the moment.

The bonds and stamps are symbols of hope, faith and determination, not escape but participation.

The job of selling both, separately and together, is the same address at the audience's emotions that we have always made.

Selling the show has always been the job of making 'em want it enough to come in, and to like it when they get it. It's about the same with bonds and stamps, shares in America and the better life that we have and hope to have. The bonds and stamps will sell in just the degree in which we are able to make the customers realize the reality of their participation.

A LOT of the success will depend on the programing and the tying in of available screen materials and screen appeal with the national appeal for the War Bonds. The show is part of the selling—and the whole job well done is not only a job for the nation, but one for the standing of your industry and the community status of your theatre.

The job has its peculiarities, just as every new picture has its twists and quirks. Picture Mr. Public importuned, implored, beseeched, supplicated, entreated and exhorted on every hand to buy War Stamps and Bonds. When he awakes in the morning, the newspaper under the door, in addition to its own campaign, will carry ads as part of the drives being conducted by many other industries. As he goes to work, car cards will flash the same message at him. In his office or factory or store he is asked to allot part of his salary toward their purchase. When he goes to lunch, the menu from which he selects his food punches across the same message. In midafternoon he is likely to be solicited in person by a member of the A.W.V.S. whose work in this cause has been highly praised. Before he goes home he may be called on the telephone by a committee from the industry in which he works.

And then, as he goes to a show that evening, the effect of all this persuasion is driven home. It is up to us to crown this man's day by showing him in our lobbies, on our screens and elsewhere that right there in his place of entertainment is the place to buy War Bonds and Stamps.

¶ Bob brings with him the equipment of abundant experience, both in varied forms of journalism and a broad participation in the business of the motion picture, including advertising and publicity, and various theatre connections from the box office wicket to theatre managership and exhibitorship.

¶ Mr. Wile is a native New Yorker. He went to work on Westchester County papers in 1925 and spent some years in metropolitan journalism, with that emphatic New York American. He went to RKO in theatre connections in 1930, and subsequently to advertising and publicity work, successively, with B. F. Zeidman, and Sol Lesser, and thence to the managership of the Granada theatre at Pearl River, till 1936. Since then he has been in motion picture journalism.

—THE EDITOR

Let us go forward, then, to the task. Let every showman vow today, "I will sell through my theatre and my efforts more War Bonds and Stamps than anyone else in my city." Keep a record of the campaign on War Stamps and Bonds; it can be submitted for the Quigley War Showmanship Award.

GREETINGS, Showmen. . . . I have come to sit down at the editor's side of the Round Table. As always, here is the open meeting and forum for the men who deliver motion picture entertainment at the box office, to hear their problems, their adventures and experiences, and to record their successes. As many of you know, I have been a practitioner in the field, too; so I come with eager interest to represent you and our common interest in these pages. Let's be hearing from you.

"The Fleet's In" Sails On Down

Through the cooperation of the local Navy Recruiting office and the Omaha World-Herald, ad head Ted Emerson ahead of opening of "The Fleet's In" at the Tri-States Omaha, extended an invitation to all mothers whose sons had joined the Navy since the Pearl Harbor episode, to be guests of the management on opening night. This stunt not only brought extra publicity breaks and art in the newspapers, but built a lot of goodwill for the theatre.

For his street ballyhoo three days prior to opening and during the run, a member of the house staff dressed in sailor's uniform promenaded streets with an attractive girl on each arm. The trio wore back banners reading: "The Fleet's In at the Omaha Theatre." In addition, the entire staff was outfitted in white sailor uniforms. Working with local record distributors, juke boxes throughout the city were filled with hit numbers from the picture, each box carrying card with theatre name and playdates.

Promoting several strings of genuine signal flags from the Navy, these were snapped together and strung from the top of the building to the canopy, while red and white pennants, each with title on it were featured in the lobby and foyer. Out front, a juke box played "Anchors Aweigh" and tunes from the picture.

Kresner Teaches Dancing

At Stamford, Conn., M. L. Kresner at the Plaza Theatre, tied up with the local Arthur Murray Studio, since one of the song hits featured in the film is "Arthur Murray Taught Me Dancing in a Hurry" and a dance routine titled "The Fleet Foot," was created by Murray. Four instructors were in the theatre for two weekends in advance of the opening, two stationed in the mezzanine lounge and two in the main lobby. The latter couple would do an exhibition dance and when a sufficient crowd had collected would inquire if anyone would like to receive free instruction on the "Fleet Foot." Patrons so desiring were taken to the mezzanine for private instruction and those who showed promise were asked to enter a contest to be held on the stage opening night. Those who agreed were given further free instruction at the Murray Studio. Kresner reports that the night before opening there were some 75 couples who had entered the contest, therefore an elimination contest was held to get five of the best for the finals on stage. The Round Tabler reports the entire cost of the promotion amounted to twenty-four dollars, including the services of an orchestra.

Goth Honors Localite

Some nice publicity was garnered from local dailies by Edgar Goth, director of advertising and publicity for the Fabian Staten Island theatres, the management honoring a local youth who enlisted in the Navy recently, as a "typical Navy recruit." The lad was feted throughout the day and was a guest at a luncheon-meeting of the Kiwanis Club, guested by owner of local night spot for dinner and then taken to the St. George Theatre to see "The Fleet's In.' Photos and stories were run in papers which gave mention to the theatre and picture.

Mobilization of a Circuit

COMPLETE mobilization of the facilities of a theatre circuit for the national war effort is exemplified in the program adopted and carried out by the Lucas & Jenkins circuit from its headquarters in Atlanta, Ga. The program includes integration with the community effort for the promotion of war bond sales, showings of Victory Films, encouraging enlistments for the armed forces, and support of campaigns for entertainment and gifts for Army and Navy personnel. One feature of the campaign has been a traveling theatre exhibit, complete with lobby displays, 24 sheets, neon marquee signs and stamp sales booth, which has been sent to every house in the circuit. The complete program follows:

Traveling Theatre Exhibit

Out Front:

Two elaborate cut-out signs, 12 feet by two feet, hanging on sides of the box office. Banner and bunting around marquee and up and down each side of building.

Two hand-painted 24 sheets on top of marquee.

A flashing neon sign, 80 feet long, around edge of building, reading: "Buy Defense Bonds".

Inside Lobby:

Flags, bunting and banners.

Hand-painted portrait of each war-time President, placed at regular intervals each side of lobby.

Eight display frames, with appropriate poster in each, with flags and U. S. shield above each frame.

Two large display windows opening into lobby, dressed with appropriate posters urging the purchase of bonds and stamps.

Six hand-painted murals, each 8 feet by 12 feet, depicting historical incidents in the life of the nation, and titled: "Remember Pearl Harbor", "Keep the Life Line Flowing", "Industry in Defense", "Battle of Manila", "Buy Defense Bonds and Stamps" and "Keep Them Marching".

Another mural, made largely from tear sheets and newspaper clippings, entitled: "Why We Should Buy Defense Bonds and Stamps".

In regular one-sheet frames throughout the lobby were appropriate posters urging support of the entire war effort.

In center of lobby was a covered booth built after the style of a teller's booth in a bank with four brass-grilled windows. Booth was decorated with flags and bunting and carried a large sign, reading ATLANTA BANKS and POST OFFICE At Your Service For DEFENSE BONDS AND STAMPS.

The booth was staffed with employees from the banks, the Post Office and the theatre. The opening was attended by rankink bank officials, the Postmaster, the U. S. Collector of Internal Revenue and other prominent citizens, and was given much publicity in newspapers as well as the newreels.

After being used in the Fox Theatre lobby, the display was routed over the entire circuit throughout the state and attracted great attention everywhere.

State Defense Savings Staff

State of Georgia Chairman—Arthur Lucas; Fulton County Chairman—William K. Jenkins.

The whole statewide effort to promote the sale of War Bonds and Stamps has been carried on under the direction of Mr. Lucas. Under his direction the cooperation of most all banks, practically all theatres, department stores and literally thousands of other outlets for these securities has been obtained. Mr. Lucas has made several radio addresses in various parts of the state in behalf of the sale of bonds and stamps. These addresses were recorded and have been used effectively in many radio stations.

Mr. Jenkins has been in active charge of these efforts in Fulton County in which is the city of Atlanta. The cooperation of practically all concerns with payrolls has been secured and acceptance of part pay in War Stamps has become a very general practice in this section. Mr. Jenkins was appointed as Major in charge of Area 1, State Air Patrol. This area embraces 57 counties adjacent to the city of Atlanta and is the manufacturing center of the state. The area, under his supervision, has been effectively organized for civilian air patrol and defense.

Showing of Victory Reels

All of these films shown in every theatre—100 per cent.

Mr. Jenkins is also Chairman of the Citizens Committee for the 4th Corps Area. Under his direction 100 sweaters have been procured and presented to the Red Cross and stage equipment and drapes have been purchased and installed in fifty theatres in the Army Camps in this area.

He is also Chairman of the Citizens Advisory Committee for Air Corps Recruiting. Many meetings have been held, with large public attendance and recruiting greatly stimulated.

Christmas Bonuses

Every Christmas bonus was paid to every employee in the entire circuit in Defense Stamps.

At a meeting held in the Lucas Theatre in Savannah, Ga., two pianos, furnished by Lucas & Jenkins, were presented to the Flying Field at that city.

At a meeting in the Grand Theatre in Macon, Ga., an entire set of musical instruments were presented to Cochran Flying Field.

At a meeting in the Miller Theatre in Augusta, Ga., in cooperation with Mr. Frank Miller, partner in that city, an entire set of musical instruments was presented to Daniel Flying Field.

In the recent Army Day Parade in Atlanta, one of the most attractive floats was furnished by Mr. Lucas and Mr. Jenkins.

Employees Now in Armed Forces

More than eighty have gone directly into the armed forces from employment with this circuit. Each has been written a letter by Arthur Lucas, president, and efforts are made to keep in touch with each one. Included in this group is the only son of Arthur Lucas, now training in the Air Service, and the son-in-law of Arthur Lucas, a reserve officer in the Navy, now serving as gunnery officer of a munitions ship. Likewise in service are the two sons-in-law of William K. Jenkins, one in the Air Service and the other in the Engineer Corps.

Mr. Harold Martin, a former special writer of the Atlanta Constitution and now with this circuit in charge of publicity, has been loaned to the Treasury Department and is devoting practically all of his time to the promotion of the sale of War Securities.

Payroll Deductions for Bonds and Stamps

Vigorous campaign put on and practically 100 per cent of entire circuit personnel requested that part of their pay each week be in War Securities.

YOUR FAMILY Theatres

DEAR FOLKS!

It is our desire to use this space, ordinarily allotted for the purpose of telling you about our current programs to acquaint you with the few facts concerning the drive now being conducted in Little Rock and North Little Rock to collect your used and discarded furniture.

There are over 150 day rooms (recreation rooms for the boys in camp) that are bare of furniture with no visible means of obtaining furniture other than through your donations.

The Young Business Men's Association is making arrangements to pick up this furniture at your convenience, so call the young lady NOW at 4-6123 and tell her to send for that old chair, table, couch, or what have you.

Today's program at the REX theatre: Dick Arlen and Andy Devine in "LUCKY DEVILS" and TIM McCOY in "FIGHTING RENEGADES." Plus chapter 7 of Johnny Mack Brown in "THE OREGON TRAIL."

Today's program at the LIBERTY theater: MAY ROBSON in "GRANNY GET YOUR GUN" and JOHNNY MACK BROWN in "BURY ME NOT ON THE LONE PRAIRIE," Plus Chapter 2 "DRUMS OF FU MANCHU."

THANKS,
YOUR FAMILY THEATRES
C. C. MUNDO, Gen. Mgr.

Glamour Stuff Sells "Hardy"

Centering their campaign around glamour contests to publicize dates on "Courtship of Andy Hardy," Lou Hart at Schine's Glove, in Gloversville, and Mel Blieden at the State, in Anderson, Ind., report sizaeable newspaper breaks and art in advance of opening.

Tieing in with local beauty expert and fashion shop, Hart followed the theme of the picture and planted stories in his local dailies asking for girls to enter his "glamourizing" contest. Done over in true Hollywood fashion, the winner was presented with complete wardrobe by cooperating merchant. "Before and after" photos were run in paper, which came through with daily stories on the entries, leading up to winner's appearance on stage. In addition tieup with local photographer brought pictures of the contestants which were planted out front on 40 by 60 carrying details of the contest. Winner was chosen by local prominents and representatives from MGM Studios.

Out in Anderson, Blieden gave the male contingency a break by searching for a local Mickey Rooney. Stories were run in cooperating papers, requesting that the doubles submit photos to the contest editor, who, together with a committee decided on six boys who would qualify for the finals. These boys then appeared on stage at a Saturday midnite prevue, running through a series of tests, audience applause deciding the winner, who was presented with a trophy from Mickey Rooney.

Through the cooperation of one of the local high school art teachers, a competitive contest was held in which students drew pictures of Rooney and Donna Reed from stills furnished by Blieden. Guest tickets were awarded in this connection, dailies coming through with stories and announcement of winner.

Druker Sponsors Visit Of "Joe Smith, American"

As a result of a special screening of "Joe Smith, American" for members of the Council on Americanism, Maurice Druker at Loew's State, in Memphis received the organization's full endorsement of the picture and at a meeting discussed ways and means of inviting Joe Smith, first civilian hero of this war to visit Memphis.

Official Committee was appointed to greet Smith, who was greeted at a special welcome breakfast at leading hotel. Interview was held over WREC, American Legion officer and band were on hand and the "hero" was guested at various functions with attendant publicity.

Street Bally Features "Dumbo"

Howard Feigley, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, devised a novel street ballyhoo to highlight his campaign for "Dumbo." Feigley rented a life-size animated elephant which he had mounted on a truck and paraded through the streets a week before playdate and later had it placed in the theatre lobby during the run of the film.

War Showmanship Award

F. S. HARMON, Executive Vice-Chairman, War Activities Committee, Motion Picture Industry, says: "The announcement of a new Quigley Award for War Showmanship has already evoked cordial response from Mr. George J. Schaefer, the Chairman of our Committee, and from my colleagues, Messrs. Arthur L. Mayer and Si H. Fabian. May I extend my personal expression of appreciation.

"The campaign to sell War Savings Stamps and Bonds in theatres, just now getting under way, will offer the exhibitors of the country a fine opportunity to demonstrate their showmanship while your announcement is certain to arouse their competitive spirit in a most wholesome and useful fashion."

FRED W. BEETSON, Executive Vice-President, Association of Motion Picture Producers, Hollywood, observes: "It is with particular interest that Hollywood learns of the Motion Picture Herald's decision to give a special Award for War Showmanship, in connection with the annual Quigley Awards.

"Certainly the first duty of every showman is to do his part in the war effort. It is fitting that the showman adjudged to have contributed the most to this effort should be recognized and regarded."

JOHN HAY WHITNEY, Director, Motion Picture Division, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, says: "I have read with much interest of the special Award for War Showmanship to be made along with the annual Quigley Awards conducted by the Motion Picture Herald.

"This plan for recognition has my hearty approval. I think it is a fine thing indeed to encourage theatre showmen of this country to lend their special talents to the all important job of winning the war."

Street Ballyhoos Featured By Woodward for "Valley"

John Woodward of the Weller Theatre, in Zanesville, Ohio, highlighted his "Valley of the Sun" campaign with a street ballyhoo arranged through tieup with automobile agency. New car was employed to cover downtown streets five days ahead carrying orange cards with red and black letters on both sides reading: "For sale cheap. Must raise money to see Clarence Buddington Kelland's 'Valley of the Sun' at," etc. Another phase of Woodward's campaign included a three-day coloring contest sponsored by local papers with daily stories and sketches appearing in the news section.

A candid camera stunt was arranged through tiein with pharmacist in which cameraman covered streets opening day with persons having their pictures taken and spotted in the store's window receiving guest tickets to the show. To complete his campaign, the theatreman uses a walking book bally in downtown section opening day.

Shane Sells Horror Show With "Freak" Contest

Are you horrible? Do you scare people? Could you Haunt a House? These and similar questions were asked by Sid Shane at the Colony Theatre, in Brooklyn, in connection with his double horror bill of "Buried Alive" and "Torture Ship." Through heralds, programs and 40 by 60s in his lobby Shane invited folks to come dressed in as freakish costumes and makeup as they cared as part of his contest in advance of the picture's opening. Audience applause decided winners, who were awarded guest tickets to see "Arsenic and Old Lace."

IN THE COURTS

Schenck Sentence Reduced by Court

Because of his "substantial aid" to the Government in its prosecution of William Bioff and George E. Browne for extortion, Joseph Schenck, former chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., last week obtained a reduction of his sentence for tax evasion from three years to one year and a day. Mr. Schenck surrendered on Saturday following the reduction of sentence on Friday by Federal Judge Grover C. Moscowitz on recommendation of U. S. Attorney Mathias F. Correa.

Legal difficulties made it necessary for the court first to suspend sentence on Mr. Schenck's conviction for evading income taxes for the years 1935 and 1936 and then impose the one year and a day sentence on a plea of guilty to a perjury indictment which had never been brought to trial. An appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court was dropped earlier in the week by the film executive.

Mr. Correa disclosed to Judge Moscowitz in making his recommendation that Mr. Schenck immediately volunteered to aid the Government in its case against Browne and Bioff following his conviction. This step was a reversal in Mr. Schenck's stand towards the investigation of the former labor leaders, Mr. Correa said, since the defendant had heretofore refused to aid the Government.

It was also revealed by Mr. Correa that Mr. Schenck had deposited in escrow 60,000 shares of stock of Twentieth Century-Fox valued at $540,000 to insure the payment of the estimated $400,000 which the Government claims is still due for income taxes. In this regard, Mr. Correa pointed out, Mr. Schenck had already paid a fine of $20,000 imposed by the court.

Atlantic City Judge Denies Petition

Vice-Chancellor W. Frank Sooy, in Atlantic City Chancellory Court last week refused to restrain temporarily Edward Skyrm from leading or changing the operating status of his Somers Point Theatre on the ground that a bill of complaint filed by Winfield W. Love, his former manager, adequately protected his rights. The action, brought by Mr. Love and his wife, Mrs. Lenore Love, sought to safeguard a 1930 agreement executed by Mr. Skyrm to bequeath the theatre property to the Loves in his will. The Loves also asked that Mr. Skyrm be ordered to correct their reconveyance of the property to him which allegedly nullified the 1937 pact.

Seek Pre-Trial Testimony Of Paramount Officials

Minority stockholders of Paramount Pictures, Inc., suing the company and its board of directors to compel reimbursement of all sums paid to George E. Browne and William Bioff, this week asked New York Supreme Court Justice John E. McGeehan for the right to examine Paramount officials on "local shakedowns by Browne and Bioff in New York, Chicago and other cities." The request was made as part of an application for an order to take the testimony before trial of the 23 top Paramount officials including Adolph Zukor, Barney Balaban, Austin C. Keough and Stanton Griffis.

Affidavits submitted on the motion explained that while testimony on the Bioff-Browne extortion trial clearly proved payment of $100,000 to the former labor leaders it also indicated other payments made in local shakedowns but not covered during the trial. Suit now pending in the Supreme Court seeks return of the money to Paramount on the claim that the payments were illegal and unauthorized.

High Court to Rule On FCC Regulations

The United States Supreme Court, next Monday, is expected to announce whether, in its opinion, the New York Federal District Court erred in dismissing, for want of jurisdiction, the petition of National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System for an injunction against enforcement by the Federal Communications Commission of its network regulations.

Argument on the networks' appeal from the lower-court action was heard last week, with members of the court evincing keen interest in the question of whether the regulations had caused damage to the networks.

They were told that very substantial damage had been done in that some affiliates had announced their intention to abrogate their contracts, others had refused to renew and other broadcasters, sought by the networks, had refused to negotiate. The damage, it was explained, arises from the fact that the networks rely to a great extent upon the stability of circulation as a talking point to advertisers.

The court now is nearing the end of its 1941-42 term and will hear no more cases. From now until June 8 the members will be discussing the cases already heard and writing the opinions which are to be delivered before adjournment for the summer.

Seek Dismissal of Little Rock Suit

The newly chartered Southern Amusement Enterprises, Inc., Little Rock, which intervened recently in a suit brought by Ensor Theatre Company, Inc., to prevent showing of motion pictures and vaudeville acts at the Little Rock City Auditorium, has asked Chancellor Dodge of the chancery court of that city to dismiss the Ensor suit on the ground that Act 355 of the 1939 Legislature, which allowed establishment of the Auditorium, permits the type of entertainment planned by the new firm.

Chancellor Dodge issued a temporary injunction April 24th preventing the Little Rock Auditorium commissioners from negotiating further for a contract after Ensor, operating several movie houses in Little Rock, petitioned that the city fathers "were illegally entering the show business."

"Take a Letter, Darling"

(Paramount—Block 6)

Comedy

Everything that excellent acting, superb writing and exacting direction can provide was poured in copious quantities into "Take A Letter, Darling," making it a complete laugh riot from start to finish. Critics and the public can rank it with all top comedies to come out of Hollywood back to and including "It Happened One Night."

Rosalind Russell, as a partner in an advertising firm who uses her feminine talents to obtain clients; Fred MacMurray, as her male "secretary"; MacDonald Carey (from the stage), as the owner of a tobacco factory, four times married and four times divorced and who gets ideas about a fifth wife; Constance Moore, as his sister whose mind is more on men than on business, and Robert Benchley, game-playing advertising agency executive, all do extremely competent portrayals. They are supported by Charles Arnt, Cecil Kellaway, Kathleen Howard, Margaret Seddon, Dooley Wilson, George H. Reed, Margaret Hayes, Sonny Boy Williams and John Holland.

The George Beck story is quite novel. Miss Russell hires male secretaries as her "escorts" and to act as protection in such guises as "fiance" should her male clients become amorous, or their wives suspicious. Having discharged several because they misunderstood her intentions, she hires MacMurray, a painter who wants to make enough money to go to Mexico and paint.

Complications arise when they fall in love, but Miss Russell becomes quite cold to MacMurray, relegating him to his position as employee. In order to obtain the tobacco account, she turns her charm on Carey, whose four wives' alimony turned him into woman-hater. At the same time she gives MacMurray instructions to entertain Carey's sister.

Matters become complicated when Miss Russell, in a pique, accepts Carey's proposal of marriage. But the wedding plans fall through because of MacMurray's actions.

Claude Binyon's screenplay is replete with brilliant dialogue and hilarious situations. No small part of the credit for the entertaining qualities goes to producer-director Mitchell Leisen, whose pacing and timing were extraordinarily able. Fred Kohlmar was associate producer.

Syncopation

(RKO Radio—Block 6)

History of American Jazz

This is a tracing of the development of syncopated music in the United States from 1906 to today. It is also a story about some people whose experiences span that period, but the story of the people has been subordinated to the story of jazz music throughout.

Exhibitors exploiting the picture have as top material the presence in the picture, as themselves and playing together, of Benny Goodman, Gene Krupa, Charlie Barnett, Harry James, Jack Jenny, Alvino Ray and Joe Venuti, all of whose names are box office magnets to the young people of today. The picture in whole contains equivalent ear diversion for the young people of yesterday and the day before, and it offers Connie Boswell as a treat for all the young people of all time.

To the fore in the story are Jackie Cooper and Bonita Granville, syncopation-minded trumpeter and pianist who meet in Chicago in 1916 and have their lives rocked by the war, colored this way and that by developments in the orchestral world thereafter, ending the picture still together and happy in the success of his danceband. A large cast appears in support.

William Dieterle, producer and director, spared neither expense nor time in giving the film advantage of its musical content, which consists of 16 listed numbers performed more or less in their entirety. Camera and microphone are used artfully and in a variety of combinations to create a maximum effectiveness for the styles of music rendered. Leith Stevens, musical director, and Hall Johnson, vocal director, collaborated skillfully.

The story is an original by Valentine Davies.

Previewed at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood, to an audience attracted by "Saboteur." Response to the previewed attraction was volcanically applausive in several spots, quite the opposite in others, winding up with an all-out burst of approval for the finale in which distinguished bandleaders perform as an orchestral unit.—WILLIAM R. Prohibition Era Melodrama

The stageplay that made Broadway box-office history some years ago as staged by Jed Harris, and which was filmed between then and now as a musical, comes up this time as a melodrama of the prohibition period rich in the color of that era and strong in point of performance, production and presentation.

The story, it will be recalled, is about a hoofer and his partner, whose careers become ensnarled in the criminalities of their racketeer employer and his enemies, sudden death supplying a steady offstage accompaniment to their efforts as entertainers.

A novelty is supplied in that George Raft, who shares top billing with Pat O'Brien, plays himself in the picture, opening it and closing it as himself, the film star, and carrying his own name as the hoofer whose story he is presented as telling.

Raft and O'Brien, the latter playing a police officer who refuses to shield the racketeer, turn in sparkling performances, Brod Crawford as the racketeer supplying another of equivalent power. Janet Blair, Anne Gwynne, S. Z. Sakall and Marjorie Rambeau are others whose performances contribute to a telling whole.

Production by Bruce Manning is of the best and direction by William A. Seiter misses nary a point.

Fourteen song hits of the period are worked into the musical score with utmost effectiveness.

My Favorite Spy

(RKO Radio—Block 6)

Kay Kyser Entertains

Kay Kyser plays Kay Kyser in this Harold Lloyd production which has about it much of the spell that the producer used to impart to his comedies when he was at the peak of his career before the camera.

It is Kyser, as Kyser, who enters the U. S. Army intelligence division and sets out to obtain evidence against his employer, who is engaging in anti-American activities. In order to accomplish this, he is forced to perform acts which get him on the front pages in unfavorable light which he is not at liberty to explain to his bride, whom he has had to leave on his wedding day and is compelled to leave again and again, without explanation, thereafter.

It is an ingeniously contrived and unfamiliar story, scripted with skill by Sig Herzig and William Bowers from an original by M. Coates Webster and directed expertly by Tay Garnett. It deals with Army enlistment in a manner to produce laughs, yet respectfully, and it handles the espionage angle in such wise as to create a maximum of suspense and humour without at any point discounting the seriousness of the assignment in hand.

Bandman Kyser gives his best performance to date in the picture, and his band is likewise present, performing a few band numbers which are not, however, the major content of the picture.

Ellen Drew and Jane Wyman add much to the proceedings as the two girls, playing the wife and a secret operative, most importantly involved in the adventures of the hero.

Previewed at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood, to a midweek audience which signified by consistent laughter its approval of the production.—W. R. W.

Beyond the Blue Horizon

(Paramount—Block 6)

Safari with Lamour

This Technicolor feature, one of Paramount's next block-of-five, was designed by Associate Producer Monta Bell and Director Alfred Santell to give ample opportunity for showmen to bring another Dorothy (Sarong) Lamour jungle-thriller to their patrons. As an added attraction for the women in the audience, there is Richard Denning, tall, blonde and well-poured into leopard skin trunks who accompanies Miss Lamour on another fanciful safari into the jungle.

There's a plot, by scenarist Frank Butler, which is unwoven amidst colorful studio sets. It involves Tama, played by Lamour, an American child who has been brought up in the jungle by an ape, one Go-Go, and a tiger, Nya. Go-Go's histrionic ability should have earned him a cast credit at least.

Miss Lamour, heiress to the Chase fortune, whose parents have been killed years before in the wrecking of their village by a mad elephant, Mabok, is brought to America by Professor Thornton, (Walter Abel), to claim her millions. In newspaper publicity incidental to her arrival, Tama's statement that she used to swim with her pet tiger arouses the suspicion of a circus lion tamer, Jakra, played by Denning. His publicity agent, Jack Haley, grasps the opportunity to capitalize on front-page publicity and plants further suspicion in the minds of the Chase lawyers that Tama is a fake. To substantiate her claim, Tama offers to return to Forbidden Valley and search for the missing proof of her identity which lies buried in the destroyed village.

Back in her native kindergarten, Tama finds Nya and takes the tiger swimming, unmindful that Jakra is watching. He realizes she has told the truth and endeavors to help her reclaim the papers. Accompanied by the Professor, Jack Haley, and native guides, Tama and Jakra set out for Forbidden Valley. Just as the safari reaches the village to discover positive proof of Tama's inheritance, Mabok, the mad elephant appears on the scene. There is an exciting moment or two before Jakra traps the elephant and leads him to his destruction. Everything ends happily for the primitive lovers.

The picture is up to the usual Lamour-safari standards and it will serve theatremen well in offering an entertaining evening to patrons who will find the flora and fauna episode an escape from screaming war headlines.

Dr. Broadway

Medicine and Melodrama on Broadway

The outstanding characteristic of this picture is the plot itself. From a story by Borden Chase, with the screen play by Art Arthur, it tells of the adventures of a doctor, with bright Broadway as a backdrop, who comes into contact with such personalities and forces as gangsters, money, murder, a girl who wants to throw herself off high buildings, and some regular guys.

"Dr. Broadway's" first deed is to save, by psychology, a girl who is about to hurl herself from one of the top floors of a high building, only to discover that it is a publicity stunt. In order to save her a jail sentence, however, he gives her a job as his receptionist. The plot begins to thicken when a gangster asks the Doctor to see that his daughter, an actress whom he has not seen for a long time, gets a certain large sum of money. The gangster is subsequently killed in the Doctor's office, and the Doctor himself is under suspicion. However, he manages to get the money, and institutes a search for the gangster's daughter. But several other gangsters know about the money and all want to lay their hands on it. The situation becomes dangerous and desperate when the Doctor's receptionist is held as hostage in lieu of the money, but the Doctor has a cure for practically everything.

The cast is not too well known—Macdonald Carey takes the title role, Jean Phillips is his receptionist, and J. Carrol Naish and Edward Ciannelli are the gangsters. But with a plot that has several innovations, sustains interest, has plenty of gangsters and action, the audience, once lured into the theatre, will be inclined to stay there.

Sol C. Siegel was the producer, E. D. Leshin, the associate producer, and Anton Mann, the director.

The Falcon Takes Over

(RKO Radio—Block 6)

Detective Story

George Sanders, who was "The Saint" in the series by that name, is "The Falcon" in this melodrama of like type and plays it much the same. He is in this setup as an amateur detective who has decided to retire from the pursuit of criminals but gets drawn into the murder mystery which makes up the substance of the story.

Scene of the picture is New York, to which place an escaped convict has returned in search of a girl who was going to wait for him but, as it turns out, didn't. He goes to the night club where she used to work and, not finding her, kills the proprietor. James Gleason portrays the police investigator who competes with the Falcon in attempting to apprehend the killer, who does some more killing before they get him. Lynn Bari is seen as the girl reporter who allies herself with the Falcon.

Humor figures importantly in the scheme of things, with Gleason and Allen Jenkins supplying the most of it.

Production is by Howard Benedict, direction by Irving Reis and the screenplay is by Lynn Root and Frank Fenton, from a novel by Raymond Chandler.

Previewed at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood, where a ripple of chuckles sweeping the audience at regular intervals indicated pleased acceptance.—W. R. W.

Release date, May 29, 1941. Running time, 63 min. PCA No. 8056. General audience classification.

Mexican Spitfire Sees a Ghost

(RKO Radio—Block 6)

Comedy

With Lupe Valez and Leon Errol in the leading roles, and Charles "Buddy" Rogers and Elisabeth Risdon carried over from the earlier pictures in the series, "Mexican Spitfire Sees a Ghost" is the seventh in the RKO group. Errol again plays a triple role in his versatile manner and provides most of the comedy.

The adventures of the four this time take place in a house which is being used as a hideout by criminals who are making nitroglycerine in the basement. Secret doors and panels further complicate the situations and the marital mixups are of the pattern laid down in the previous offerings.

Supporting players include Donald MacBride, Minna Gombell, Don Barclay, John Maguire, Lillian Randolph, Mantan Moreland, Harry Tyler and Marten Lamont.

Cliff Reid produced the film, with Leslie Goodwins directing from an original screenplay by Charles E. Roberts and Monte Brice.

Undercover Man

(Paramount-Sherman)

Western

This latest in the "Hopalong Cassidy" western series leaves much to be desired. There is little action and what action there is consists of much shooting without the contending factions making much headway. There are too many loose ends that the script failed to take care of. Otherwise the film is the usual "Hopalong" with William Boyd very much in command at all times, "Breezy," played here by Jay Kirby, being romantic, and "California," in the usual person of Andy Clyde, carrying the comedy.

The picture is localed on the Mexican border. An outlaw band plays havoc with gold and other shipments on both sides of the border and "Hoppy" is "drafted" to clear up the situation. This is not an easy proceeding for "Hoppy" is impersonated by one of the bandits and is suspected of being the gang leader himself. The climax comes when "Hoppy" and a sheriff's posse ambush the gang as they ride into the trap "Hoppy" set for them.

Harry Sherman produced and Lesley Selander directed the picture. The principal characters are those created by author Clarence E. Mulford.

The Strangler

(Producers Releasing)

British Mystery Drama

This British mystery melodrama is a leisurely paced affair that starts out with the strangler committing the latest of his several acts, that of strangling a girl with a stocking, and then bogs down into a series of meetings between a girl crime reporter and a writer of mystery stories. The meetings consist for the most part of dialogue difficult to follow. The climax has some action as the strangler makes his appearance once again and is caught in the act.

The principal players are Judy Campbell, the girl crime reporter; Sebastian Shaw, the crime novelist; Henry Edwards, an inspector with Scotland Yard; George Puge, who plays the part of a mysterious wealthy American who is convicted as the strangler on circumstantial evident, and Niall MacGinnis, the real strangler.

Night in New Orleans

Melodrama

Preston Foster and Albert Dekker, lieutenants on the New Orleans police force, vie for the appointment as police chief and their rivalry leads to the former's being accused of murdering a gambler and his subsequent solving of the crime plus the exposure of the head of the city's gambling ring. Fast moving, studded with comedy, the picture was acclaimed at its Los Angeles trade showing.

Reviews received too late for this Section are printed in the regular news pages of the Herald and are reprinted the following week in Product Digest for their reference value.

Patricia Morrison was Foster's wife, Charles Butterworth, Dooley Wilson, Paul Hurst, Jean Phillips, and Cecil Kellaway head the supporting cast.

Jonathan Latimer, who specializes in crime fiction, fashioned the screenplay from a story by James R. Langham. Neither Latimer nor Director William Clemens waste footage in speeding the story along from a suspenseful opening to an action-full conclusion.

The comedy situations are provided mostly by Miss Morrison and Dooley Wilson, the latter in the role of Negro servant to Foster.

Foster enacts the role of a quick-thinking detective whose troubles start when a gambler with whom his wife had been infatuated prior to their marriage uses letters she wrote him to attempt to force a stop to a gambling investigation. He recovers the letters when he commits a burglary and discovers the gambler dead. Suspected of murder by his rival, he leads the force on a merry chase until he uncovers the criminals.

Sweater Girl

Musical Comedy

A melodrama with a college musical comedy background, "Sweater Girl" contains two songs already proved hit parade material, plenty of comedy, suspense and romance, plus a generous helping of feminine pulchritude.

The hit songs written by Frank Mercer and Jule Styne are "I Don't Want to Walk Without You" and "I Said No."

Comedian Eddie Bracken is the principal figure in the story, which deals with the mysterious slayings of two students and an attempt on the life of another. June Preisser and Betty Rhodes are the feminine leads, supported by Phillip Terry, Nils Asther, Frieda Inescourt, Kenneth Howell, Johnnie Johnston and William Henry.

The 77 minutes have been utilized to the full by screenplay writer Eve Green and Director William Clemens, and the result is a full measure of entertainment. Robert Blees contributed added dialogue and Beulah Marie Dix and Bertram Millhauser wrote the story which served as the basis.

When the youths, one a campus columnist and the other a composer of songs for the musical, are murdered, Bracken and Miss Preisser embark on an attempt to solve the crimes, while at the same time continuing with rehearsals. After following several false clues to the accompaniment of suspense and comedy, they manage to find the criminal.

The other songs, also by Mercer and Styne, used in the production, are "What Gives Out Now" and "Sweater Song."

Powder Town

(RKO Radio—Block 6)

Comedy About Sabotage

Only in such timeliness as derives from the fact that a powder plant supplies its principal setting and some enemy agents prowl the place does this overstretched comedy rate attention. Response of a preview audience indicated plainly that this was not enough to justify the running time.

Edmond O'Brien as an absent-minded scientist absorbed in developing a trick explosive and Victor McLaglen as the workmen assigned to guard him are chief figures in a loose snarl of complications, most of them designed for humor, terminating in the thwarting of enemy attempts to steal the formula. The story ranges from collegiate comedy to serial-type action, sagging in both directions.

Cliff Reid, no longer connected with the studio, is down as producer and Howland V. Lee is listed as director, David Boehm having devised the screenplay from an idea by Vicki Baum and a novel by Max Brand. All of these people have done better things.

Previewed at the Pantages Theatre, Hollywood, where a Monday night preview audience laughed a little at first, went to snickering later on, winding up in an outgiving of clapping and hooting such as serial picture audiences indulge in.—W. R. W.

The Yukon Patrol

(Republic)

Canadian Royal Mounted Vs. Espionage

"The Yukon Patrol," based on Zane Gray's "King of the Royal Mounted," more likely in name only, was released by Republic as a serial on September 20, 1940, under the title, "King of the Royal Mounted." It was reviewed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue dated August 17, 1940.

Now being distributed as a feature, it has as its motify the truism that the Canadian Royal Mounted, to whom the picture is respectfully dedicated, still can get their man. The locale in Canada, the time is the present, with the current war situation serving as the historical background. Enemy agents are greatly in need of a certain "Compound X," which because of its magnetic powers, is invaluable is helping to destroy the British Fleet and the blockade. The compound is obtainable at a mine in Caribou, Canada, and it is to this place that the enemy agents look for their source of supply. The Canadian Royal Mounted get on the job, and after many exciting episodes, acquit themselves gallantly.

The picture is a saga of action from beginning to end. There are murders, hand-to-hand fisticuffs, aeroplanes, submarines, horses, plots and counter-plots, with first the enemy having the strategic ascendancy, and vice versa. It will certainly appeal to youngsters and those who demand action above all else.

My Gal Sal, at Roxy, Lives Up to the Ads

MY GAL SAL, at the Roxy, with Rita Hayworth, Victor Mature, Carole Landis, John Sutton, James Gleason, Phil Silvers, Walter Catlett, Mona Maria, Frank Orth, Stanley Andrews, Libby Taylor, Andrew Tombes, Joe Downing, Harry Strang and Charles Arnt. Directed by Irving Cummings from a screen play by Seton I. Miller, Darrell Ware and Karl Tunberg, based on a story by Theodore Dreiser. A 20th Centuy-Fox film.

The boys who wrote the advance ads for My Gal Sal, at the Roxy, weren't exaggerating when they called it "glamorous," "joyous," "tuneful," "eye filling." It's all that and more—it's the best high-stepping screen musical in a long time.

Although it was suggested by Theodore Dreiser's book about his song-writer brother, Paul Dresser, the story itself is obvious, something to hold together the lovely technicolor gay 90s background and tuneful melodies Dresser composed. It shows Paul running away from his Indiana home, taking up with a medicine show, his first meeting with the glamorous musical comedy star he later married, his arrival in New York, his success as a song writer, his romantic feud with the aforementioned actress and finally his marriage to her.

Only criticism I make of the film is that it is too long. However, that's quibbling. It's packed with songs that are a joy to hear, its humor is snappy and saucy, its background is colorful and its acting is first rate.

Chief joy is luscious Rita Hayworth, who looks like a million bucks, dances miraculously well, sings (if it is her voi songs to perfection and plays her comedy part with spirit of a first-rate actress. Good, too, is Victor Mat He's improving as an actor—which is news. Among players high marks go to Jimmy Gleason, James Sutto and Paul Silvers.

Here's a song and dance entertainment that h everything.

ARE CRITICS NECESSARY?

A CHALLENGING discussion of the function and lack of function of the newspaper critics of the motion picture is presented in the news columns of this issue reporting on an interview with Mr. William K. Hollander of Chicago and the Balaban & Katz circuit.

In sum, Mr. Hollander considers picture criticisms a mere heritage from the stage, and points out that B. & K. have not used "quotes" and "raves" in their advertising for many years. Mr. Hollander is equipped for opinion and utterance. He was the motion picture editor of the august Chicago Daily News before he came to the pictures and exhibition.

It is interesting to record, too, that the star rating system, which has been so much and currently a subject of acrimonious debate involving advertising in New York, was born in Chicago, with Mae Tinee's column in the Tribune. It died there, too, when B. & K. made argument directly to Colonel McCormick, publisher, about its destructive influence at the box office. The star rating system came to New York to Captain Joseph Medill Patterson's Daily News and Liberty Magazine, both Tribune derivatives. It survives here presumably by inertia.

NEW PRAISE WORD

WHEN that able and experienced showman, Mr. Tom Connors, reached out to record his opinion of "My Gal, Sal" in an advertisement the other day, he described it as:

" . . . what the public wants, and which is the finest example of 'escapist' and morale-lifting entertainment . . . "

As we have observed before, this word "escapist", which was once the hissing label of the "social-consciousness" critics, has become a term to denote pure entertainment.

It was brought into the language of our show world as a term of damnation and scoffing and now it has remained to praise. Salesmanship and Tom Connors have taken it over. There is a market for escape.

One is reminded that it was the whimsy of the late Mr. Claud Saunders to remember that it was eight years after he brought the verb, "to exploit", and with it "exploitation" and "exploiteer", into the patois of our show world when he discovered that the lexicons held it a term denoting processes of greedy selfishness. By that time, for movieland anyway, it had come to mean just ballyhoo.

Every great industry makes its own parlance, and the while enriches the national language.

Now let the social-consciousness boys invent a new curse for entertainment, and they'll lose that one, too.

CHANGES AHEAD

SIGNIFICANT and possibly far-reaching effects on the attention habits of the public are developing under war influences. The radio, for instance, by reason of the heat of war news and its urgency has become a vastly more important medium of news. In the New York area, the news summary is on the air every hour on the hour from morning to night from the New York Times over WMCA, while from WNEW comes the news twenty-four hours a day on the half hour from the Daily News.

The newspapers do not know what radio and the war are going to do to daily publication, but some of them are going to be on board the development. In the background yet, but receiving in some quarters a most earnest attention, is facsimile radio. It is possible that facsimile may one day be teamed with either voice radio or television or both. It is something to watch.

Immediately in our own sector of the screen, it is to be observed that the accent of interest that the war is putting on topical and documentary pictures may make a new permanent place on the theatre screen for non-fiction pictures—a field of interest conspicuously neglected and unserved.

WAR SHOWMANSHIP

THE high order of war showmanship with which the exhibitor is responding to both the nation's cause and his special opportunities is being reflected in the pages of the Round Table section these days. Showmanship is demonstrating a decided capacity for blending the functions and methods of entertainment with the requirements of wartime screen service to the public.

An exemplification of decidedly spectacular and press-attention quality in behalf of production-distribution is afforded in the current campaigning by Mr. Mort Blumenstock for "Yankee Doodle Dandy" and a "five million dollar war bond world premiere" sponsored by the Treasury Department. The George M. Cohan story, music, and flags, flags, flags make the picture and the promotion one of the great inevitables.

Pleasant recognition is being had, with a building of good-will for this industry, which can do with so much of it. The other day Senator Sheridan Downey of California told his colleagues in Washington that: "It is altogether fitting that we should comment and point with pride when an entire industry goes all out in a special service."

SPEAKING in behalf of the conservation of rubber, Mr. Robert P. Patterson, Under-Secretary of War, got himself quoted in the papers the other day with a somewhat emphatic declaration that the public must give up trips to "Cousin Joe's and petting parties".

We must all concur in Mr. Patterson's demand for the conservation of rubber, etc., but it does not seem necessary to attack either the good neighbor policy at home or the rather well established and probably biologically necessary processes of courtship. No more petting parties would mean, eventually, no more soldiers, and for the cinema no more customers.

Meanwhile, if we know the customers, they'll walk, if they have to, to Cousin Joe's, and to save the nation.

MacLeish's Reviewers

by FRANCIS L. BURT

in Washington

ARCHIBALD MacLEISH, Librarian of the Library of Congress, will announce within a few days, probably on Monday, the consummation of an arrangement whereby the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, in New York, will become the Congressional Library's official agent in selecting "the best" of Hollywood's motion pictures for permanent preservation.

The aim of Mr. MacLeish, poet, to establish a permanent film library to preserve selected motion pictures, described in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, May 2nd, becomes possible by a grant of funds by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The Rockefellers have been large financial supporters of the Museum of Modern Art; a grant by the Rockefeller Foundation established the Museum's Film Library. John Hay Whitney, associated with Nelson Rockefeller in the Government's Motion Picture Division of the Office of Inter-American Affairs, also is a Museum of Modern Art supporter. The Museum's Film Library also is agent for the Rockefeller-Whitney Governmental agency in selecting motion pictures for use by that agency in propagandizing in behalf of American good-will in the Latin American countries.

It is understood that the Film Library's reviewers who pick pictures for Rockefeller-Whitney and Latin America, will also select films for the Library of Congress under that new arrangement. Among them is Norbert Lusk, who has had a long identification with fan magazines in New York, principally Picture Play.

Mr. MacLeish's announcement also will disclose that his plan will be conducted in cooperation with the motion picture producers, who will make current releases available to the Museum's Film Library for inspection and determination as to which pictures the Government should place in the Library's repository.

Zanuck to London

DARRYL F. ZANUCK, Colonel in the United States Army Signal Corps and production head of the 20th Century-Fox studios, arrived in London Monday, in uniform, and by surprise. To U. S. press men in London, he explained in an interview at the Ministry of Information, that he was on a military mission as a special observer for the chief of the Signal Corps.

Part of its aim, he disclosed, was to coordinate U. S. and British army training films, and he added that he hoped to establish a similar coordination of training films with the Russian Army. Already Britain and the U. S. are exchanging military training films, he said.

He told the press conferences that he had been greatly impressed by British films of Commando raids along the Norwegian coast and expressed the hope that similar films could be made of future operations by the U. S. Army.

Browne-Bioff Echo

NEW YORK Supreme Court Justice John E. McGeehan on Monday expressed the opinion that the payments made by officers of Paramount Pictures to the now jailed George Browne and Willie Bioff, and testified to during their prosecution on criminal charges, were illegal and would have to be repaid to the corporation. The statement was made in a decision denying the application of Paramount minority stockholders to examine before trial all officers and directors as well as books and records of the corporation in connection with the stockholders' suit to compel repayment of the extortion funds. The stockholders were, however, granted permission to renew their application as to specific officers of the company.

The plaintiffs had declared, in applying for the examination before trial, that testimony at the Browne-Bioff trial indicated that payments had been made besides those specifically mentioned.

After expressing his view, Judge McGeehan made it clear that it was not in his power to decide the merits of the case. "This matter is for the trial court," he said.

Mickey in the War

WALT DISNEY Productions disclosed Wednesday it was devoting 75 per cent of its output to Government films. Among these films are those for the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, the United States Navy, the United States Department of Agriculture, the Canadian National Film Board.

This year, the studio will turn out from 75,000 to 100,000 feet of defense films. All work is at cost.

The studio just completed "Bambi," full length feature. Its completion marks transition to the war effort, the studio said.

Mickey and Donald have enlisted.

Back to Britain

MGM will resume making pictures in England, war or no war, it was disclosed Tuesday in Hollywood. Irving Asher, producer for MGM in Great Britain, indicated he would return shortly to make "Sabotage Agent," starring Robert Donat. John Lee Mahin is writing the scenario in Hollywood, from a story by John Higgins.

United Artists on Wednesday previewed "Next of Kin" in London. The film was made for the War Office and is termed a "security production." Exhibitor protests over arrangements for distribution were foreseen. Already scheduled to show the film are the Gaumont British and Odeon circuits.

Films Sell War Aid

THE motion picture industry currently is engaged in one of the greatest selling campaigns in its history on behalf of War Bonds and Stamps, according to a report of industry cooperation with the U. S. Treasury Department prepared by the War Activities Committee.

The campaign being organized to sell stamps in a special theatre drive starting on May 30th will include eight special exploitation efforts, according to Francis S. Harmon, executive vice-chairman of the WAC. These include a special press book, trade paper cooperation, a national broadcast from Hollywood, 2,479 prints of a special trailer, 1,000 prints of a color cartoon plugging bond sales, and the addition of special tags to all prints shipped during the period by every major exchange.

Film companies have likewise instituted a general payroll allotment plan, in home offices and Hollywood, to purchase bonds. Newsreels have carried 25 subjects related to bond sales. Screen publicity and talent participation in the Treasury drive have also far exceeded any previous united effort by the industry ,it was said. See also page 57.

Drive-ins' Dilemma

OF all the exhibitors who watched gasoline rationing in the seventeen Eastern states this week, those operating "drive-in" theatres, watched with the most apprehension. The fate of those theatres this week hung in the rationing balance.

Already, in key cities and suburbs, theatres with parking lots, in weeks past have reported fewer customers' cars. The gasoline restrictions on pleasure driving will test to the utmost the attachment rural or suburban fans and families have for their weekly or bi-weekly movie-going habit.

There are an estimated 100 "drive-ins."

Speculation brought one salient theory: that clearance extending over a distance will not be as harmful as before to smaller, less fortunate theatres. A proprietor of such a house may no longer be forced to watch neighbors depart in automobiles for competitors' theatres miles away, but with later and better pictures.

Cost Order Pinches

IT pinched where it hurt last week when the War Production Board told lavish Hollywood that its $5,000 ceiling on new construction applied also to motion picture sets. The limitation order brought instant reaction from the producers, and representatives rushed immediately to Washington from Hollywood to seek a broader interpretation.

N. Peter Rathvon, of RKO and Joseph Hazen, of Warners, in Washington last week asked the WPB to classify sets as temporary construction and grant a relaxation of the $5,000 per picture limit. Producers in Hollywood have called the limit highly inadequate, even with permission to make use of new materials in stock, or those which can be reclaimed, borrowed, or rented.

While it is admitted the board order permitted larger expenditures on specific authority from Washington, it is pointed out that frequently it is not until the sets are actually in construction that it becomes known that costs will be higher than contemplated. Producers contended that to stop construction pending an application to the board would interfere with production schedules.

'Film Cut Inevitable'

CONFIRMING that Paramount would produce 42 pictures in the 1942-43 season, and revealing that it had in work and completed 20 films for next season, Y. Frank Freeman, the company's studio chief, said at the New York home office Wednesday afternoon, that reduction of the annual number of pictures was inevitable, although he believed the process would be slow.

He asserted the reduction would be caused by a reduction of all factors contributing to picture making: by drafting of directors, writers, actors; by lack of material; by absence of large sections of the public in the services.

Of rental payment by the exhibitor for the "victory" short subjects suggested to the industry by Lowell Mellett, Coordinator of Government Films, of which Paramount is thus far to make four, Mr. Freeman said, "It's a job we've all got to do." The studio head added he did not think one or two of them which might be intrusive with propaganda, would cause patrons to stay away, remarking the movie fan did not come to see short subjects.

The budget for "For Whom the Bell Tolls" is $2,650,000, Mr. Freeman said, adding he hoped to shave this by $150,000.

Iceland Premiere

ICELAND had its first world premiere on Sunday. It was unique among premieres. It was the first to which admission was by uniform of the American fighting forces only. Not a press agent was on hand. And not even the producer of the picture, "Tarzan's New York Adventure," knew when and where it was to have its first showing.

The first performance took place on Sunday evening, May 10th, in an army theatre jammed with 1,200 U. S. fighters, Major General Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of U. S. forces in Iceland, advised Brigadier General F. H. Osborn, chief of Special Service at the War Department.

A 16 mm print of the latest Tarzan tale was flown to Iceland in an Army airplane. It was the 38th current feature sent to Iceland and one of the 1,200 screen programs in 16 mm to be donated this year by the industry to soldiers in combat areas, through the War Activities Committee.

Francis S. Harmon, executive vice chairman of the WAC, said that 161 current features had been shipped in 16 mm through the Army's Overseas Film Exchange. All national distributors, laboratories, and makers of raw stock are cooperating in the project.

War Censor Boards

MACHINERY to censor all films exported or imported from the United States has been set up in three cities by Byron Price, Director of Censorship. Review boards at Hollywood and New York are to examine commercial product and a special board has been assigned to Rochester to check 16 mm product processed at the Eastman Kodak laboratories.

Since the inception of the film censorship, reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on April 4th, pictures destined for export or import into this country—other than to or from Canada—have been examined by the postal authorities. It is now planned to have the special boards work in cooperation with the industry.

Colonel Preston Coderman, chief postal censor for Mr. Price's office, is handling the Washington end of the film reviewing. No special post will be created there for film censorship, separate from that exercised over all mail. Regional boards will be headed by Major Ralph W. Liddle, in Hollywood, Lieutenant George Ernest, New York and Lieutenant James Todd, Jr., in Rochester.

DECREE SPEEDS NEW RELEASES 14%; 427 NOW DELIVERED

Total from All Companies as of May 15th Is 54 More Than in 1940-41

Selling under the United States Government's motion picture consent decree has speeded the wheels of distribution machinery as never before. Every distributor in the business is running ahead of last season's release schedule—the total advance at this eight-month period running 54 features ahead of 1940-41, 11 companies having already released 427 of their 1941-42 product, compared to 373 delivered by May 15th for 1940-41.

Basically responsible was the beginning of the new order imposed on the Big Five decree signatories to get to market more often, a direct result of blocks-of-five selling limitations. This, in turn, speeded the selling ambitions of the other six distributors, including the three non-decree signatories.

In addition, anticipations of other new factors dictated by decree operations, including decentralization of the sales system and its resultant creation of a new intimacy between seller and buyer, nearly all companies, in the months before decree enactment, last September 1st, started to build up large product backlogs, to quickly unloosen in the first months of the stiffest competitive market for selling in years.

The pegging of release dates for the remainder of the season goes on apace. The Big Five have 45 marked up, the other six have 42.

198 Delivered By Big Five

In 1940-41, the Big Five made pre-seasonal commitments of 261 features. By May 15th of last year they had delivered 175, and by the end of the season, they had delivered 248. Because of decree operations, they made no advance commitments for 1941-42; but by May 15th, Friday, they will have delivered 198.

Columbia, Monogram, Producers Releasing Corp., Republic, Universal promised 273 features and Westerns for 1941-42 and delivered as of May 15th this year, 229. Last year, from 528 to 540 features and Westerns were promised by the 11 companies, with 526 delivered for the 1940-41 season by September 1st.

Line-up of features completed or in production with no dates pegged for this season's release, which may be held over for the 1942-43 season, are the following: seven from MGM; 14, Paramount; 7, RKO; 5, Fox and 7, Warners. Definitely slated for next season are 8, MGM; 13, Paramount; 9, RKO; 9, Fox and 10, Warners.

Although product release plans for the 1942-43 have not been announced by all the Big Five and other six companies, MGM, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, Republic, Monogram and PRC already have reported on forthcoming schedules.

Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of Paramounts' studio, declared last Friday that the company's production schedule would provide for 36 to 40 features and six Hopalong Cassidy films.

Republic announced this week that it had set 34 features, six outdoor "specials," and 26 westerns, a total of 66, for 1942-43.

PRC told its sales executives last week at the company's convention in Hollywood that a minimum of 42 pictures were scheduled for next season.

For MGM and Monogram announcements see pages 15 and 16.

Spyros Skouras, new president of 20th Century-Fox, announced to the trade press last week that his company would spend $28,000,000 on approximately 52 pictures.

Disposition of features completed or in production for the 1941-42 season, among the Big Five depends, to a large degree, it was learned this week, upon the outcome of the blocks-of-twelve selling plan proposed by the United Motion Picture Industry. "Specials," such as Paramount's "Holiday Inn," RKO's "Bambi," the new Disney feature, and Warner Bros.' "Yankee Doodle Dandy," which will be sold separately, are slated for the new season, either under the present blocks-of-five selling or under the new UMPI plan, when, as and if it is approved by the Department of Justice and Judge Henry W. Goddard.

REPUBLIC SETS 66 FEATURES; MONOGRAM, PRC SET PLANS

Republic Budget Put at $15,000,000; Paramount Regional Meetings Held

Selling plans for the 1942-43 season, and what product exhibitors will be offered by at least five companies were in specific outline this week as other distributors pushed plans for their regional or national conventions.

The independent distributors were pushing ahead with plans to be on the market with next year's pictures by early summer. Republic also reported from the first of its regional sessions that it would complete current commitments by July 15th. A record $15,000,000 production budget will provide Republic with 66 features and four serials for 1942-43.

Monogram revealed its plans at a Tenth Anniversary Meeting at Hollywood, close on the heels of Producers Releasing's announcement of last week. Paramount, first of the Big Five to announce new season product, held its first regional meeting to discuss the 18 pictures already set for release. MGM announced on Tuesday it would release 50 to 52 features next season. See page 16. The other consenting distributors still waited to see the disposition of the UMPI sales plan, and its proposed changes in consent decree selling methods.

Republic Sets Record Budget

Republic Pictures on Monday announced the largest budget in its history and an output of 66 feature pictures for the 1942-43 season. At the eastern regional sales meeting in New York on Monday, James R. Grainger, president, disclosed a budget of $15,000,000 for next year's production.

According to Mr. Grainger and M. J. Siegel, head of production, the Republic list will include 34 features, six outdoor "Specials," and 26 westerns. The company will also produce four serials. The plans represent an increase of four pictures over last year.

Advertising and exploitation expenditures by Republic will also reach a new high, according to Mr. Grainger, with a budget of approximately $1,500,000. The money will be expended among trade papers, fan magazines, general circulation magazines and for radio time, he said.

The company will have delivered all of its 1942 commitments by July 15th, the salesmen were informed at the New York session. Regional sales meetings were also scheduled for Chicago, on Thursday and Friday, and for the Republic studio in Hollywood on May 19th and 20th.

The 34 features will cost $9,000,000, the 6 outdoor specials, $1,800,000. The 26 westerns will cost $3,000,000, and the four serials will be made for $1,200,000.

The outdoor specials will include four Gene Autry and two Roy Rogers' specials. "A Gay Ranchero" and "Starlight on the Trail" with Gene Autry and "Heart of the Golden West" with Roy Rogers have already been set.

In the western field, Republic will produce four Gene Autry Supreme productions; six Roy Rogers' Master westerns; eight Don "Red" Barry action westerns, and eight Three Mesquiteer westerns.

Features scheduled for the first six months of the 1942-43 season are: "Thumbs Up," "The Commandos," "Fighting Devil Dogs," "Chatterbox," "X Marks the Spot," "My Buddy," "Say It With Music," "Tahiti Honey," "The Old Homestead," a new "Ice-Capades Revue," "Hit Parade of 1943," "Back to God's Country," "War of the Wildcats," "Gangs of Barbary Coast," "Hi, Neighbor" and "Fu Manchu Strikes."

The westerns are led by "The Lone Prairie" and "The Ranger's Serenade"—starring Gene Autry and featuring Smiley Burnette and Fay McKenzie. Also set are "Ridin' Down the Canyon," "Man From Music Mountain" and "Silver Spurs" with Roy Rogers and George "Gabby" Hayes.

The Three Mesquiteers will appear in "Shadows on the Sage," "Valley of Hunted Men" and "Prairie Pals." Four action westerns, "The Sombrero Kid," "Dead Man's Gulch," "Outlaws of Pine Ridge" and "The Sundown Kid," will star Don "Red" Barry.

The first two serials are "King of the Royal Mounted Rides Again," and "G-Men vs. The Black Dragon."

Gross receipts for Republic are 20 per cent ahead of last year, H. J. Yates, owner of Republic disclosed Tuesday. He reported that current bookings for the last two months have set a new high of $2,500,000. He attributed the record bookings to favorable exhibitor response to "Remember Pearl Harbor," "Lazybones" and "In Old California."

Mr. Grainger announced Tuesday that Republic last week closed contracts for the 1942-43 product with Paramount-Richards Theatres, and the Theatre Service Corporation, operating 125 houses in Louisiana and Mississippi. The deal was closed by Mr. Grainger and L. V. Seicshnaydre, New Orleans branch manager, with Gaston Dureau, of the Paramount-Richards Theatres, and John Richards, of the Theatre Service Corp.

Mr. Yates, Mr. Grainger, Mr. Siegel, William Saal and W. L. Titus, Jr., left immediately for the Chicago meeting, which was to open Thursday at the Drake Hotel.

Others who were to be at Chicago included branch managers Geo. H. Kirby, Cincinnati; L. V. Seicshnaydre, New Orleans; W. M. Snelson, Memphis; Lloyd Rust, Dallas; R. I. Brown, Jr., Oklahoma City; Wm. Baker, Chicago; L. W. Marriott, Indianapolis; J. G. Frackman, Milwaukee; Sam Seplowin, Detroit; F. R. Moran, Des Moines; C. F. Reese, Omaha; Nat E. Steinberg, St. Louis. Also franchise holders Gilbert Nathanson of Minneapolis, and R. F. Withers, of Kansas City, and Jack Curtin, home office field representative.

Monogram Meets in Los Angeles

Monogram opened its Tenth Anniversary Convention at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, on Wednesday morning. Franchise holders and branch managers from all sections of the country attended the three-day session. Discussions of product plans for next year were led by W. Ray Johnston, president, Trem Carr and Steve Broidy. See the special Monogram section of Motion Picture Herald, pages 19 to 54.

On the eve of its Tenth Anniversary sales convention Monogram on Tuesday in Hollywood reported gross profits of $217,978 for the nine months ending March 28th. The figure was prior to provision for Federal taxes.

Regional Series Begun by Paramount

Paramount launched on Monday the first of five regional sales meetings to acquaint district staffs and salesmen with the product planned for 1942-43. Last week Barney Balaban, president, and Y. Frank Freeman, vice president in charge of production listed a backlog of 13 pictures with which the company will lead off the new season. They met with district and home office sales heads at Adolph Zukor's Mountain View home near New York.

Mr. Freeman said Wednesday that the 1942-43 program would comprise 42 pictures, of which 34 would be features, two westerns, and six Hopalong Cassidy westerns. He added that 20 pictures were completed or in work, and three were to begin next week, "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "No Time for Love," and "Interceptor Command." The fate of the UMPI sales plan is one of the factors in delaying final production arrangements he admitted. Although half of the 1942-43 product is already completed or in work he said that a final production budget had not been set due to uncertainty of long range cost planning in wartime.

Monday the New York regional meeting opened at the Hotel Pierre, with more than 45 managers, salesmen and bookers in attendance. J. J. Unger, eastern division manager, presided. Neil Agnew, Charles Reagan, George Smith and Oscar Morgan spoke at the two day sessions.

PARAMOUNT TO SHARE PROFITS

Paramount's sales staff in the field will have an opportunity to share in the company's profits under a new sales incentive plan announced this week by Neil Agnew, general sales manager. It is designed to bring about better cooperation throughout the entire organization and give every member of the selling staff an opportunity to share in profits.

Mr. Agnew announced the plan at the first of the company's regional sales meetings at the Hotel Pierre, New York, on Monday. A committee of district sales managers will administer the profit plan and select individual winners from sales staffs. It is described as the first attempt to set up a permanent profit sharing system to act as a stimulus to more efficient selling and booking of motion pictures.

PRC to Stress War Themes

On the closing day of the Producers Releasing convention in Hollywood last week Leon Fromkess, vice president in charge of production announced that approximately half of the company's 24 general features for next year would have topical war themes. The 18 western pictures will be divided into three series of six each, as described in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week.

Mr. Fromkess also announced assignments for the first two features. "A Yank in Libya" will feature H. B. Warner, Walter Woolf, Parkyakarkas and Duncan Renaldo. The cast for "Baby Face Morgan" includes Mary Carlisle, Robert Armstrong, Richard Cromwell and Warren Hymer.

MGM to have 52 for Season

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will release approximately one picture a week or a total of 50 to 52 features for its 1942-43 schedule, William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, announced at New York this week. It is about the same schedule established for the current season, he pointed out.

MGM will not hold a national sales convention this year, Mr. Rodgers said. A decision has not yet been reached as to whether regional meetings will be called for the sales forces, nor, if so, where and when the field forces will meet to discuss product plans.

Proposals for a national MGM sales convention in Hollywood, under discussion earlier in the season, have been abandoned, it was indicated.

Monday, May 18th, the company's district sales officials and home office executives will meet in Chicago at the Blackstone Hotel. It is reported that the sessions will be devoted principally to a discussion of the wartime patronage losses suffered by some small town exhibitors. Leaders from other branches of the industry have been invited by Metro to attend the meeting, it was announced.

UNITY PLAN STARTED ON ITS WAY TO WASHINGTON

Committee Acts on Approval of Exhibitors; Official Sanction Seen

The United Motion Picture Industry's trade practice plan was ready with its ticket to Washington this week, to seek United States Government approval of its new selling system, advanced as a substitute for the consent decree blocks-of-five.

On Tuesday members of the Unity subcommittee on trade practices, headed by Allied's Jack Kirsch, met in New York's Warwick Hotel, to act on reports from the field on the Unity movement's blocks-of-12 selling proposals. Exhibitor organizations, they were told, had voted approval, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, by a margin of 49 to 8.

Wednesday, the UMPI committee-of-the-whole was convened at the Warwick by its chairman, William F. Rodgers, of MGM, to hear the report of the Kirsch sub-committee. No action was taken then on the report of the subcommittee, with the sessions continuing over until Thursday, when Unity set about to select its representatives to carry the official document to the Department of Justice, in Washington, for Governmental approval.

As the Wednesday meeting ended, both exhibitor and distributor members of the committee-of-the-whole emerged from the meeting expressing open satisfaction with what one member characterized as "the 100 per cent success of the Unity idea" as a solution to consent decree objections.

Government Sanction Predicted

The committee to visit the Department of Justice is to ask both the approval of the Unity formula and the incorporation of its sales provisions into the consent decree. One source said that it was "very likely" that the sales plan would be in Washington by the first of the week. He predicted it would receive Government sanction and expressed the opinion that selling plans among the "Big Five" decree-consenting companies could now be placed in specific form, for the 1942-43 season starting in September.

The sub-committee on Tuesday debated Unity proposals for the establishment of conciliation machinery to settle territorial and individual disputes. They were also told that all of the distributor participants in Unity had instructed all salesmen and branch managers to guard against any action which might be construed as attempting to force short subjects.

Following the report of the trade practice committee to the Committee-of-the-Whole on Wednesday, exhibitor members of the whole committee met in caucus. They unanimously subscribed to a motion which endorsed an agreement, with respect to conciliation, with such film companies as would be willing to subscribe to the Unity plan, as submitted by the sub-committee on trade practices.

Regional grievances, it was also said, would be settled by special conciliation boards drawn from national leaders of both branches of the industry. The plan seeks to settle all disputes before they reach the stage of arbitration or court action.

MPTOA SUGGESTS FOR ARBITRATION:

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America suggested six specific changes in consent decree arbitration procedure in its bulletin to members on the eve of the UMPI trade practices meeting. They are, in essence:

1. Reduce transcript costs, with the administrative system maintaining a stenographic record.
2. Reduce hearing costs by using arbitrators familiar with the business, and curbing the length of hearings, records, etc.
3. Amend the rules to cut the elapsed time between the filing of action and a final Appeal Board award.
4. Grant oral Appeal Board hearings.
5. Permit the amending of a complaint up to the close of hearings to insure relief under the applicable section of the consent decree.

A permanent operating budget and a method of distributing the financial burden of maintaining permanent Unity headquarters in New York were also on the agenda of Thursday's committee-of-the-whole session.

Sub-committee recommendations for the speeding up and extension of arbitration under the consent decree likewise were due for a discussion by the full Unity committee on Thursday. Conclusions are to be submitted to the Department of Justice for incorporation in the consent decree, along with the proposed changes in selling procedures.

Rentals, Costs Discussed

The question of rental prices, and the cost of pictures, which National Allied threatened to inject into the sessions following a meeting of its board of directors at Chicago last week, had not become a known issue up to Wednesday afternoon. It was said that an agreement had been reached among committee-of-the-whole members to complete action on the Unity program as it stands before turning attention to the new and broader issues raised by the price problem. One member observed that he felt that if Unity was to discuss film prices at all it might better do so after establishing a successful precedent of industry agreement on the price plan.

Exhibitor members of Unity called to the New York sessions included: Jack Kirsch, subcommittee chairman; Ed Kuykendall, H. A. Cole, Leo F. Wolcott, Sidney Samuelson, Robert White, Roy E. Harrold, Martin Smith, John Rugar, William F. Crockett, Lewen Pizor, Fred Wehrenberg and Rotus Harvey. Hugh Bruen was PCCITO alternate for R. H. Poole of Los Angeles, who is ill.

New York Unity members: Joseph Bernhard, Ned E. Depinet, William F. Rodgers, T. J. Connors, H. M. Richey, A. W. Smith, Felix Jenkins, Howard Levinson, Max A. Cohen, Joseph Vogel, Neil Agnew and C. J. Scollard, Abe Montague, James R. Grainger, Steve Broidy and Harry Brandt.

Exhibitor Bulletins Approve Plan

Bulletins to the membership of both the major national exhibitor associations, Allied States Association and Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, expressed approval of the Unity UMPI plan on the eve of the New York sessions.

Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, in a message dated May 13th, again urged support for the Unity plan. It is, he admitted, not a perfect solution to exhibitor problems. But he advocated its support as the most immediate and best possible relief to provisions of the consent decree.

The Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers in Hollywood, and Samuel Goldwyn were both condemned by Mr. Kuykendall for "interfering" in the unity discussions, and for their recent public statements urging exhibitors to reject the plan.

He characterized as "vicious and untruthful" assertions that the Unity plan was a return to block booking.

"To clear up any possible confusion as to the MPTOA attitude, it should be made clear that neither the consent decree blocks-of-five, trade show systems, nor the UMPI blocks-of-twelve proposal, is satisfactory or deserving of unqualified approval. We would much rather throw the whole consent decree into the ashcan,". wrote Mr. Kuykendall.

Among defects in the arbitration system which MPTOA would like to see remedied were what was described as the ignorance of arbitrators about the film business, the right of the New York Appeals Board to set aside field decisions without knowledge of local situations, restricted authority of the decree's sections and the costs of legal service and transcripts.

MPTOA Against 'Freezing' Rentals

MPTOA came out flatly against "freezing" prices on film rentals. It might result, Mr. Kuykendall warned, in a cheapening of product, and would remove the extra profit incentive which prompts "hit" productions.

The National Allied bulletin following the Chicago meeting of its directors repeated its approval of Unity and reiterated the stand against rising film prices, as reported last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Allied leaders will study the possibility of government controls, or unity action, but the bulletin warned that no immediate results should be expected by exhibitors.

BREEN RETURNS AS HEAD OF CODE ADMINISTRATION

Reappointment Announced by Hays after Resignation from RKO Studios

The return of Joseph I. Breen to the post of director of the Production Code Administration was announced Friday in New York by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

Mr. Breen has resigned his position as vice president in charge of production for RKO-Radio Pictures, Inc. He returns to the Code Administration directorship after 11 months as the operating head of the RKO studios in Hollywood. Mr. Hays first appointed Mr. Breen to direct the Production Code Administration in 1934.

Joseph I. Breen

The former head of the PCA was due to return to the Administration's Hollywood offices on Friday. He resigned on June 17, 1941, to go to RKO.

To succeed Mr. Breen at RKO George J. Schaefer, president, appointed Charles W. Koerner general manager in charge of the studio and RKO production. Mr. Koerner has been acting head of the studio for the past two months while Mr. Breen was on extended vacation leave in Central America.

Mr. Hays announced the reengagement of Mr. Breen following a meeting on Thursday between Mr. Breen and the MPPDA directors at New York. Terms of the appointment were not disclosed.

Reappointment Long Rumored

The reappointment of Mr. Breen to the Production Code Administration had been predicted in some industry circles since early in February. The industry lawyers' Committee of Six was reported to have discussed his reengagement during its policy making meetings in March. They were said to favor Mr. Breen's return in view of his experience and contacts in the administration of the Production Code.

No successor had been named since Mr. Breen resigned his post with the Code Administration last June. The nine man board reviewing films and scripts for Code authority continued to function under the acting leadership of Geoffrey Shurlock, a member, and an advisory committee.

It was reported that the board would continue to have full charge of the administrative details of the code with Mr. Breen as presiding officer, and head of the board. No changes in the board personnel or its present operating methods were contemplated, it was said.

Although terms of Mr. Breen's new contract with the Code were not revealed it was reliably reported that he returned at the $50,000 per year salary which he formerly received. Hollywood Boulevard heard also that RKO was to pay half of the salary, or $25,000, as part of its settlement of Mr. Breen's contract as vice president.

Had Early Career On Newspapers

Mr. Breen, a native of Philadelphia, began his professional career in newspaper work, here and abroad, and was for some years in public relations work in Chicago. He went to Hollywood for the Hays Office first on an assignment of relations and dealings with the errant fan press. In that period the formation of the Production Code Authority to instrument and implement the application of the Production Code was put into execution and Mr. Breen was given the post which soon came to be called administrator.

Alperson RKO Theatres Head; Koerner in Charge of Studio

Edward Alperson now heads the RKO theatre circuit. His appointment as general manager was announced Monday through the New York office, by George J. Schaefer, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. He succeeds Charles Koerner, who last week formally became general manager in charge of the RKO Radio Pictures studio, Hollywood. Mr. Koerner had been acting head of the studio for ten weeks past, filling in during the vacation of Joseph Breen, who, also last week, rejoined the Production Code Administration. During Mr. Koerner's absence from the New York office, Mr. Alperson had been acting head of theatre operations; and his appointment as its permanent head grew from conjecture to certainty.

Mr. Alperson has years of theatre experience. He began in this industry in 1910, as usher at the Brandeis Theatre, Omaha. He was then shipping clerk and film salesman for Fox and First National, in that city. Followed then a district managership for Preferred Pictures, in 1923. He was branch manager and then midwest district manager for Warners; assistant to Spyros Skouras as film buyer for Warner Theatres in New York, 1929; and Warner general sales manager in 1931.

In 1932 he joined Skouras Theatres, heading the film buying department. In 1936 he helped organize, and was president of, Grand National Films, now defunct. He then became film buyer for Fox Midwesco, Fox West Coast subsidiary. He came to the RKO circuit on May 28th of last year.

20th-Fox Awards Scholarships

Twentieth Century-Fox has awarded three Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism students newly established scholarships in the form of six-month script writing contracts including transportation to and from Hollywood. The scholarships were awarded to George Root of Portland, Ore.; Thomas Whaton Bridges of Shreveport, La., and Nancy Wintner of New York City. The students will begin work on June 1st at $50 a week.

The scholarships grew out of a film script course given at the school by Morris Ryskind, Pulitzer prize-winning playwright, who was so impressed with the work of the three students that he suggested the idea to the company.

40 Years a Showman

The staff of the Electric Theatre, Larned, Kansas, has designated the week of May 24th as "John A. Schnack Week" to honor their employer on his 40th anniversary as a showman. The local press and patrons are joining in the tribute to Mr. Schnack, who opened his theatre in 1902. M. E. Bybee, Irene Beck, Oscar Almquist, Ray Clarkson, Grace Wheeler and Jean Shearer are on the committee.

Monogram Pictures'

TENTH ANNIVERSARY

W. RAY JOHNSTON
President
Monogram Pictures Corporation

A WHOLE decade has sped by since first we heard about Monogram Pictures Corporation, and so busy and swift have been the fleeting years that it seems only a recent yesterday. The progress for most of the motion picture, and certainly for Monogram, has through those ten years been substantially upward. That initial program of the dawn period for Monogram held twenty-eight features. The announcement here this week presents fifty features—and a new ambitious higher level of production standards.

¶ Monogram was born in the depths of the great Depression. It made its way in a difficult world and grew and progressed by finding for itself, surrounded by competition, a sector of service. It had nothing to sell but pictures. It also had showmen for the selling. Monogram was founded by W. RAY JOHNSTON, producer of long and varied experience, when he called together the independent exchangemen who had distributed his Rayart pictures before. Both alike, the producer and the uniting exchangemen, had lived and worked in intimacy with the world of the motion picture and close to the customers. It is to be remembered that Ray Johnston had his motion picture beginnings 'way back yonder with the Thanhouser studios up at New Rochelle, one of the most competent demonstrations of making pictures and money at the same time that the early history of the art afforded. And TREM CARR, in charge of production for Monogram through the years, carries the fullness of ripe experience and abundant successes.

¶ Upward from that beginning and through a number of developmental reorganizations, Monogram and its policy have marched on, at increasing pace. Its record shows more pictures, improving pictures, and more customers, among them many important circuits. Now, with rising payrolls of the war industries creating and supporting buying power among the workers, there appears to be an ever-broadening market and opportunity for production so especially attuned to the tastes of the multitudes—the big majority which these experienced showmen know so well.

Executive Director

THE good will of thousands of exhibitors throughout the world is Monogram's most prized possession. Behind this intangible asset stands a deeply-rooted policy of fair dealing, and an organization dedicated to the observance of honesty in its exhibitor relations.

Ten years of successful operation have had as their basis a continuing sales policy that has never been altered. In its essentials, it is the policy of the good neighbor; of understanding, of mutual respect and appreciation of the other man's problems. To this realistic program Monogram owes its well established and progressive position today.

To W. Ray Johnston and Trem Carr, founders of the organization, Monogram is deeply indebted. A long-range policy, instituted by them a decade ago, has guided the organization through the storms of a grave economic depression to sound financial security. Monogram's program of features has, year by year, shown a steady and mounting improvement in every department and its financial history reflects great credit on their wisdom.

With Steve Broidy at the sales helm and Norton V. Ritchey guiding the foreign distribution, every indication is present that the next decade will raise to even greater heights the standards of which we today are justly proud.

The tenth anniversary convention of Monogram Pictures Corporation, beginning May 13th, at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, brought franchise holders and exchange heads from all parts of the United States. The four-day meeting was called for sales planning, production discussion, and franchise analysis as they affect the company's production program for the 1942-43 season.

General sessions of the convention were officially opened May 14th, by W. Ray Johnston, president, with approximately 125 delegates in attendance, including franchise holders from 36 United States distribution centers, foreign representatives, exchange managers and members of the Monogram home office staff in Hollywood.

Fifty pictures, all of feature length, will constitute the 1942-43 program of Monogram Pictures, it was announced at the convention.

BUILDING A FOUNDATION FOR SUCCESS

THE strides that Monogram has made during the past few years has resulted in its being referred to as "the fastest growing company in the industry". We take justifiable pride in this assertion and we feel that the severe handicaps which at times have beset it have only strengthened its will to survive and conquer.

When, for reasons of temporary expediency, distributing organizations have curtailed their schedules, Monogram has maintained its program. This policy has been one of Monogram's most prized assets.

We look forward to the coming years with complete confidence in our ability to march onward with a strong step, possessed of the knowledge that our plans and achievements fill an honored place in the motion picture industry. We know that in the years to come Monogram will continue to prosper because, with so strong a foundation, its structure is certain to weather any storm.

—W. RAY JOHNSTON.

two of which will be specials—"Dawn on the Great Divide," and "Overland Wagon Trails." The "Range Busters," headlining John King, Davey Sharpe and Max Terhune, will also appear in eight western pictures.

The Monogram program will also include two "Road Show Attractions" to be sold separately as produced during the season. First of these will be "Killers of the Amazon," the South American adventure picture now being filmed by Clyde Elliott-Charles Ford in the Brazilian swamps and jungles bordering the Amazon River. The other will be "Sun Bonnet Sue," staged on a lavish scale and based on the famous song by Gus Edwards.

THE CONVENTION

Addresses of welcome by Robert Poole, of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners; Charles Skouras, of Fox West Coast Theatres; and Howard Stubbins, Monogram's Pacific Coast franchise holder, opened the anniversary meeting. At the inaugural session, Harry Thomas, Eastern division manager, discussed the situation in his territory. His talk was followed by New York reports by Joseph Felder; Philadelphia reports by Sam Rosen, and Washington reports by Harry Brown.

"Views of an Old Monogrammer" were given by Irving Mandel, of Chicago; and "Franchise Committee Cooperation" was discussed by John Mangham, southern franchise holder.

The South American situation was reviewed by Norton V. Ritchey, vice-president in charge of foreign sales. Dr. Martin Harris spoke "From the Exhibitor's Point of View"; and "A Message from England" was delivered by Ralph Bettinson. Alton W. Brody, director, spoke on "Laboratory Cooperation."

Trem Carr, executive director in charge of production, introduced a number of Monogram guest stars.

Lou Lifton, director of advertising and publicity, gave a talk on "Publicity and Advertising," and Forrest Judd discussed "Exploitation." "As Hollywood Sees Monogram" was the subject of an address by Sam Wolf.

Prize winners in the company's recently completed booking drive were introduced by Steve Broidy, general sales manager.

Screen Late Pictures

The first business session concluded with a discussion of "Distribution View Points," by Herman Rifkin of Boston, Charles Trampe of Milwaukee, Mel Hulling of San Francisco, and John Franconi of Dallas. Later the delegates viewed a screening of the new Monogram picture, "Army Bride," featuring John Beal and Wanda McKay; and sequences from "Lure of the Islands," starring burlesque's Margie Hart, and "Killers of the Amazon."

In the course of discussing production plans for the 1942-43 season, Mr. Carr introduced producers who will contribute to the program during the coming year. These were Scott R. Dunlap, Lindsley Parsons, George W. Weeks, A. W. Hackel, Ed Gross, King Brothers, T. H. Richmond, Sam Katzman, Jack Dietz, and Richard Oswald. And Mr. Dunlap, producer of the "Rough Riders" Western series, introduced the featured members of the unit—Buck Jones, Tim McCoy and Raymond Hatton, while Mr. Weeks introduced John King, Davey Sharpe and Max Terhune of his "Range Busters" series.

Charles Ford, who has just returned from South America following the filming of the jungle adventure picture, "Killers of the Amazon," produced jointly by Ford and Clyde Elliott, told the delegates of his experiences on that expedition.

The agenda of the final day of the convention called for social activities exclusively, for the most part a trip in busses for all of the 125 delegates from the hotel to Buck Jones' ranch home in the San Fernando Valley, for an outdoor barbeque and a program of Western entertainment.

MONOGRAM IN THE GROWING

THE convention May 13–16 in Los Angeles, of Monogram Pictures Corporation, served to mark completion of a decade during which this youngster among motion picture enterprises solidified its position in both production and distribution.

Monogram was originally incorporated in 1930, and in the following year, in the lowest depths of the depression, the company began to function. W. Ray Johnston, guiding spirit and president of the new organization, called together the independent exchangemen who had previously distributed his Rayart Productions, and formed them into a cooperative group, merging the production and distribution units in a single company.

Trem Carr, another veteran of the industry, took charge of production, and shortly afterward, Edward A. Golden, long active in selling pictures, joined the organization as sales manager. The initial program saw 28 features released.

In 1932 Monogram's distribution became international, with outlets in Great Britain supplied through Pathe, and in Canada by Empire Films, Ltd. The number of releases was increased to 32, and the stars on the program included Ginger Rogers, Randolph Scott, Virginia Bruce, Ralph Bellamy, Mickey Rooney, Dickie Moore, Esther Ralston, Lionel Atwill and Pauline Frederick, and others.

Steady progress marked the company's activities during the next two years, and late in 1935 Republic Pictures was formed, with Mr. Johnston as its president, and the Monogram exchanges serving as national distribution outlets. A year later Johnston left Republic to reorganize Monogram Pictures Corporation.

The Monogram identity had not been lost in the merger, and many of its features were in process of preparation when Johnston decided to go into business for himself once again. This new Monogram got well underway in August of 1936, with Mr. Johnston again as president, and the veteran producer, Scott R. Dunlap, vice-president in charge of production.

During the fiscal year of 1940-41, Trem Carr rejoined the company as executive director in charge of production. That year Monogram registered a substantial operating profit.

MONOGRAM'S PLANS FOR STUDIO EXPANSION

¶ Recently purchased production plant to be greatly improved

A total investment of approximately $500,000 will be made by Monogram Pictures Corporation in the Hollywood studio property which it purchased last February, as soon as plans are completed.

The amount includes $250,000 paid for the studio property, which the company has occupied under lease for the past two years, and various items of a large scale building program on which the organization will embark. Included in the items of improvement are new stages, new administration and writers' building, cutting rooms, street sets, and quarters for various craft departments.

A major improvement will be a $100,000 sound stage, for which plans have already been completed. This structure will be erected on a one and a quarter acre plot immediately adjoining the studio, owned by Fred Gross and just secured under an option to purchase. A large building already on this property will be converted into a process stage, and a new structure, measuring 20 by 100 feet, will house technical shop, electrical shop, the grip and drapery departments. Adjoining will be a scene dock.

This property will also provide space for the erection of two sets, one for use as a New York street and the other as an average city thoroughfare.

The main studio property already purchased by Monogram will be improved with the construction of a new administration and writers building, of Colonial architecture, and to include 25 offices. Twelve cutting rooms will be constructed on the Hoover street frontage of the property, on a lower level of one of the sound stages already in use.

Brick buildings already added to the studio during the company's occupancy include quarters for the entire home office staff of the company, now maintained in Hollywood; projection theatre, offices for publicity and other departments, and commissary.

The enlarged Monogram studio property is bounded by Commonwealth Avenue, Sunset Drive, Hoover Street and a property line to the south. The main studio was purchased from Ralph M. Like, who has operated it for several years.

PRODUCTION STANDARDS UPWARD

THE past year in Monogram production forms a fitting climax to ten years of unceasing effort. The decade now drawing to a close has seen a steady improvement in the quality of the Monogram output, embracing every factor in the making of a motion picture.

Production values were never so high; more time than ever before is given to the development of stories; standards in casting are being constantly raised; stars of prominence are already under contract for the ensuing year, or will be engaged when available for suitable roles.

Several of our productions for the season of 1942-43 will be based on thrilling phases of the national war effort, imparting to the program the timeliness of today's newspaper.

Monogram is ready for the best year in its history. Not only has it been consistent in meeting release dates, but at this writing it has productions completed and ready for release for the next ten weeks.

—TREM CARR.

JOHNSTON A FILM PIONEER

THOROUGH experience in every branch of the film industry has characterized the career of W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation. He entered motion pictures more than a quarter of a century ago, and in the intervening years has been producer, exhibitor and distributor. Born in Bristow, Ia., January 2, 1892, he obtained his education in the public schools of the neighboring town of Janesville, where his family moved when he was an infant. After graduation from a business college in Waterloo, he worked briefly for the town's leading newspaper, then as secretary to a local banker, which position led to the secretaryship of several realty companies.

In 1914, through a business acquaintance, Mr. Johnston began his association with the film industry as secretary to Charles J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle, N. Y. He was treasurer of the allied Syndicate Film Company when it produced "The Million Dollar Mystery".

Hite's interests carried beyond production into exhibition, and Johnston's knowledge of the industry was rounded out when he was given charge of two New Rochelle theatres.

Later Mr. Johnston was appointed manager of the new Thanhouser studios at Jacksonville, Florida, and after a period as assistant treasurer of Thanhouser he became president of Big Productions Film Corporation. In 1917 he joined the Arrow Film Company, becoming its vice-president.

It was in January of 1924 that Mr. Johnston branched out for himself, organizing Rayart Pictures. Through it he succeeded in turning a $10,000 stock investment into a business gross of $1,250,000 by the time talking pictures arrived in 1927. Associated with him for several years was Trem Carr, as production head. At this time it was decided to produce an annual schedule of 24 silent "Westerns", to service exhibitors who would need this type of product while major companies were perfecting the technique of sound and acquiring equipment. To carry on this program, Mr. Carr was placed in charge of production, while Mr. Johnston headed business administration in New York. In 1931, when sound had been further perfected, the company began producing talking pictures. This marked the actual beginning of Monogram.

Late in 1935 Republic Pictures was formed, with Mr. Johnston as president and the Monogram exchanges serving as national distribution outlets; however, a year later Mr. Johnston withdrew to reorganize the Monogram Pictures Corporation, starting production in the summer of 1937.

CARR A PRODUCER 20 YEARS

A PRODUCER of motion pictures for 20 years is the record of Trem Carr, Monogram's executive director in charge of production. Trem Carr was born on November 7, 1894, in Trenton, Ill., where he attended the local public schools. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois.

Commercial pursuits occupied his attention after leaving school. He became head of a construction company in St. Louis, which work led him eventually to the Hawaiian Islands, where he was paymaster on the breakwater project at Pearl Harbor.

It was in 1922, shortly after Mr. Carr arrived in Hollywood, that he launched his first enterprise as a film producer, when he placed Al St. John under contract as the star of a series of short features. Thus began his association with W. Ray Johnston in Rayart Pictures, of which Mr. Carr was vice-president and production chief for seven years.

From 1925 to 1930 he was also vice-president in charge of production for Syndicate Pictures, and early in his film career he became president of Trem Carr, Inc., in which he coordinated his production activities. The passing years steadily enhanced his standing as a producer and brought him widespread recognition for his ability to show results on the screen at low cost—getting maximum effect per dollar expended.

In 1931 Mr. Carr joined W. Ray Johnston in the formation of Monogram Pictures, becoming vice-president in charge of production. In 1934 he was elected president of Hollywood's Independent Motion Picture Producers Association.

In the following year, on the formation of Republic Pictures through the merger of Hollywood's principal independent companies, Mr. Carr became vice-president of the new organization, but later sold his interest to embark on the production of a series of pictures starring John Wayne, at Universal studios. In subsequent seasons, under the same banner, he produced such successes as "California Straight Ahead", "Conflict", "Idol of the Crowds" and "Midnight Intruder".

Monogram had meanwhile resumed operation as a separate company, and during the 1940-41 season Trem Carr rejoined the organization as executive director in charge of production, the post in which he has contributed vitally to Monogram's rapid progress.

that time many sections of the district, including this one, were sparsely settled, and included many grain fields and orchards.

First production on what is now a small portion of the Monogram lot took place in 1914, in surroundings which were decidedly makeshift and unconventional. A tiny cottage on the property was used jointly as offices and dressing rooms, and the single stage, of correspondingly small size, was merely a small platform above which were suspended white cloth diffusers, to soften the direct rays of the sun. There was no artificial lighting, and for this reason the stage had no side walls.

The studio was occupied at odd times by various small companies, producing principally short comedies and blood-curdling serials.

One of the first to use the studio was the old Kalem company, which was a unit of the Motion Picture Patents monopoly, releasing through the General Film Company.

As years went by, "improvements" were added in the form of new buildings, but these consisted mainly of old boxcars which were dragged in and fitted up for additional offices and dressing rooms. A studio projection room was constructed by the simple device of knocking one end out of each of two cars, and splicing them together to obtain the desired "throw."

Early in 1920 Charles Ray, who had become a popular star in pictures produced by Thomas H. Ince, took over the property as head of Charles Ray Productions. Up to that time the studio covered an area of only 100 by 150 feet, and adjoining lots were purchased to bring the property up to the actual plot now owned by Monogram. A brick administration building and a stage were built.

Trem Carr and Sterling Pictures occupied the lot in June, 1940, and in October of the same year were joined by W. Ray Johnston and the entire Monogram organization, which took over the Sterling agreement.

Promise vs. Performance

A promise is a sacred obligation. Monogram Pictures will not tolerate a promise unfulfilled.

A promise is only as good as the one who makes it. As men are judged by what they have done in the past, so we of Monogram Pictures, with a background of promises fulfilled, sincerely ask for your support in what we are offering for the season 1942-43.

We are young in years, but old in showmanship. We have approached the coming year with a determination to make this MONOGRAM'S GREATEST YEAR!

"The progress of your organization within this brief span of time has been very interesting to watch and credit is due those responsible for the success that has been achieved."—LOUIS W. SCHINE, Schine Circuit, Inc., Gloversville, N. Y.

"Please accept my sincere congratulations on Monogram's Tenth Anniversary. May you and your associates continue to be a vital force in the production of motion pictures in the years to come."—J. P. DROMEY, Publix Great States Theatres, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

"It goes without saying that the record which Monogram Pictures has established for itself during that period is an enviable one and bespeaks the type of leadership which has guided its progress."—JACK KIRSCH, Allied Theatres of Illinois, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

"I hope your tenth annual convention will be the most successful yet held and that your program for 1942-43 will be the most ambitious in your history despite the war, rationing, and priorities as the country must have entertainment through thick and thin."—A. E. LICHTMAN, Lichtman Theatres, Washington, D. C.

"I should like to count myself among the many who are paying tribute at this time to the courage and sagacity of two of the industry's outstanding leaders whose ideals of fair business have become traditional with the Company they founded."—WM. BORACK, Intermountain Theatres, Inc., Salt Lake City, Utah.

SIGNED FOR 1942-43

● Monogram has just signed a contract with Mooney-King Productions, by the terms of which Martin Mooney and Max King will become joint producers for the 1942-43 program. King is widely known as a business man and world traveler, and Mooney has achieved fame as newspaper reporter, playwright and screen author.

Three pictures will be made by the Mooney-King partnership for the 1942-43 schedule — first, "Foreign Agent," written by Mooney and to be directed by William Beaudine. The others will be "Time Bomb," by Scott Littleton; and "Gangs of the Underworld," by Ande Lamb.

LIVING FULLY UP TO A SLOGAN

TEN years of aggressive leadership have convinced the industry of the sincerity behind the slogan: "Monogram Means Business." To the exhibitors with whom we are proud of long-standing cordial relations, this slogan has come to mean entertainment for their customers, and good will and profits for themselves.

To the industry as a whole, the slogan means that Monogram is determined to consolidate the gains that have marked its successful career to date; to expand its already large number of exhibitor accounts; and, above all, to introduce into its product greater showmanship factors in cast strength, in story properties and production values.

—STEVE BROIDY

"As one who has been a Monogram account since you went into business, it gives me pleasure to see you making such great progress."—J. A. FEIN, Newark Ave. Palace Theatre, Jersey City, N. J.

"I can truthfully say for my patrons and myself that we have noticed and appreciate the improvement in production and star value that you have put into your pictures during this time."—GORDON S. AMOTH, Park Theatre, Fargo, N. D.

"With Monogram celebrating its Tenth Annual Convention, it seems fitting to pay tribute to the personality, progressive spirit and accomplishments of the founders-leaders of Monogram who have earned the whole hearted admiration of the entire industry and are assured of an even greater future for Monogram."—ALBER A. GALSTON, Pres., Hawaii Theatre, Hollywood, Cal.

"Dear Ray—My, how the children do grow up—you are having a Tenth Anniversary and it seems but a most short time ago that your outfit was born. I hope you go on and on, at least to your fiftieth Anniversary, and that you and Trem Carr will be there to celebrate that one—and me, too."—R.B. WILBY, Wilby-Kincey Service Corp., Atlanta, Ga.

"I want to join with the fortunate exhibitors from the TENderloin of New York to the hills of TENnessee and the Island of TENeriffe in wishing you TEN fold congratulations on this momentous occasion and to exTENd to you for the future all that your hopes and wishes might desire."—A. M. LYONS, Mgr., Pantheon Theatres Corp., Vincennes, Ind.

Your tenth anniversary finds this accepted rule in error since your organization has in this short span of years grown to be a most important adult in our industry."—JOHN H. HARRIS, Harris Amusement Companies, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"At this time, I also wish to thank you for the grand improvement that has been made in Monogram pictures during the last several years, and I know that during the coming season you will release even better pictures than ever before, and count on me making an early deal with you and playing them over our circuit."—WM. "It is most gratifying to watch the progress Monogram has made over the last few years and Monogram Pictures have become more and more important cogs in our operation."—SIDNEY MEYER, Wometco Circuit, Miami, Fla.

"Good Thoughts and well wishes are best expressed by practical action, hence you can consider this contract signed in blank for the new season's product for my following theatres: Hammond, Indiana; Elkhart, Indiana; Waukegan, Illinois; Harvey, Illinois."—NAT BERNSTEIN, Hammond, Ind.

"I have always found room for some of the Monogram pictures and hasten to encourage you and your Company. May each future year bring bigger returns to your many thousand customers, and by so doing, Monogram is bound to grow and prosper. Your company has been good to deal with."—I. H. HARRIS, Harris-Voeller Theatres, Burley, Idaho.

"Monogram indeed under your astute leadership has come a long way, with rapid strides to fill a much needed spot in this industry of ours. Exhibitors have come to regard Monogram pictures in many instances as an outstanding factor in supplying material of a high calibre with box office value."—LEWEN PIZOR, United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Philadelphia, Penn.

"In ten short years, you have come a long way, quietly and conservatively, but the healthy way which assures you a long business life."—WM. L. AINSWORTH, Pres., I.T.P. Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan.

"This is a great year for Monogram. On this occasion we especially want you to know how much those of us at the National Broadcasting Company have enjoyed our associations with your organization. We trust that in your second ten year span we will be even more closely associated."—E. G. HUNGERFORD, Jr., Television Department, National Broadcasting Company.

"I want to add my congratulations to those of other exhibitors and hope that in the next ten years you will continue to make the same fine progress as you have in the past."—H. J. FITZGERALD, Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation, Milwaukee, Wis.

"As a 100% Monogram account we look to the future with confidence and are secure in the knowledge that our mutual satisfactory relationship will endure for many many more anniversaries."—L. ROSENBLATT, Rosenblatt-Welt Theatres, New York.

MONOGRAM DISTRIBUTION

TEN years ago Monogram Pictures represented an ideal that today is a reality. This organization of thirty-one American branches with distribution outlets all over the civilized world gives ample testimony to the strength and soundness of the original plan.

Square-dealing and consideration have been the principles that have always distinguished Monogram's relations with exhibitors. It is a source of gratification to observe the steady growth and progress of this company and the fine support and encouragement with which our efforts have been rewarded by the showmen of the world.

In these pages the largest program ever undertaken by this organization has been described. Every element of showmanship and exploitation value is represented. We are confident that each of these properties merits your most serious consideration.

Inspired by your recognition of our efforts, Monogram marches on to its greatest year.

To the men who founded and made possible this organization, we dedicate our loyalty and faith in the company's future.

MONOGRAM GAINS CONTINUE ABROAD

By NORTON V. RITCHEY
Vice-President and Export Manager
Monogram Pictures

WITH world conditions as they are, it appears most unusual that Monogram should be able to sound an optimistic note in foreign business. However, it is a tribute to the international scope of the American motion picture that our company, for one, can say that its export activities—from 1939 to date—have not decreased, the entry of the United States into the war notwithstanding.

In fact, I may even go so far as to state that our affairs abroad have taken a turn for the better during the past twelve months—so much so that we have had to take larger quarters in New York to meet the ever-increasing demand for our product in those markets still open to American films. Our export office now occupies a whole wing on the twenty-first floor of the RKO Building in Rockefeller Center, and our foreign organization is working very actively everywhere.

Effect of the War

In England, for instance, blackout conditions—which greatly curtailed theatre attendance when first enforced—in the long run has had exactly the opposite effect, with the result that Pathe Pictures, Ltd., of London, our British distributors, report increased business. Incidentally, an identical situation exists in Panama, where nightly blackouts were ordered, starting last January. Theatre attendance, according to Lynn Yost, our representative there, dropped considerably at first, but no sooner did people become accustomed to war conditions than a highly favorable reaction was felt on the box-office. This, together with increased Army business in the Canal Zone, has meant a decided improvement over past years.

Switzerland, Sweden and Portugal—the remaining European markets open to us—are also holding their own. Australia and New Zealand, where Monogram is represented by Associated Distributors, Pty., Ltd., and British Empire Films (N. Z.), Ltd., respectively, continue to be good markets. As a gesture of confidence in the ultimate result of the United Nations' fight for democracy, Monogram has become a substantial holder of Australian Commonwealth Bonds, which recently brought us an article of praise from the Australian Exhibitor. What is more, our good friend, Capt. Harold Auten, the New York representative of these companies, went on record to the effect that Monogram's product is showing a decided improvement, and has turned out to be excellent box-office material in the land "down under."

Where Monogram is more than holding its own, however, is in Latin America, where the Administration's "good neighbor" policy has had a very healthy effect in so far as the American motion picture is concerned. In the course of my recent tour of Latin America, for instance, I was able to enter into contracts with many leading distributors. In Argentine, Distribuidora Panamericana, truly an outstanding organization, is handling our product. In Cuba, Cándido G. Galdo has organized Monogram Pictures Corporation de Cuba, as our exclusive distributors. Films Victoria, S. de R. L., of Mexico City, whose managing director is Rafael Arzoz, well-known motion picture man, has renewed its contract for double the number of pictures released last year. Amauta Films, the Peruvian organization headed by Felipe Varela La Rosa, has our exclusive franchise for Peru; and in Ecuador, Francis V. Coleman of Guayaquil, reports a highly satisfactory volume of business.

In the remaining Latin American territories, too, Monogram is ably represented—in Brazil, Central America, Chile, Bolivia, etc., where Monogram product is enjoying solid prestige.

EXPORT DIALOGUE

● A little-known aspect of the problems which every American producer must face in dealing with foreign audiences, is the superimposing of titles on pictures intended for export. Including "spotters," translators, card-makers, illustrators, photographers, laboratory men, etc., not less than ten different specialists share this work. Instead of rendering the English dialogue in condensed commercial Spanish titles superimposed over action, Monogram is translating its pictures into colloquial Spanish, each character speaking exactly as his Latin-American equivalent would.

exception of Paraguay—I am happy to report that at no time before have I noticed greater friendliness towards the United States, its institutions and business methods.

I am proud to observe that the motion picture industry is truly a great Pan-American family, working in accord for the good of the Hemisphere. What is more, I would go so far as to say that Hollywood has been the pioneer in establishing friendly relations with our Latin cousins, and that the cause of Pan-Americanism is greatly indebted to the American motion picture, which has brought about closer understanding and sincere affection among our peoples.

Accordingly, Monogram is paying more and more attention to the requirements of the Latin American market, avoiding anything that may bring misunderstanding.

MONOGRAM SALES PLANS

Quota for 1942-43 Set at $10,050,000

Predicting that 1942-43 would be Monogram's greatest year, company officials revealed to the franchise holders in session at the tenth annual convention at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles that the organization's sales quota for the year would be $10,050,000. This amounts to an advance of more than four million dollars since the reorganized company met in 1937.

The new figure, it was stated, is based on the most ambitious program ever planned by Monogram. Plans have been completed for a 40 per cent increase in the budgets of 16 films, and a 25 per cent tilt in the appropriations for 12 others. Included in the list of top-bracketed features for the new year are "Under Northern Lights," starring John Boles, and "Frontier Trails," an epic Western story based on James Fenimore Cooper's novel, "The Prairie."

Among the other pictures which will receive the benefit of increased budgets are four starring the East Side Kids, headed by Leo Gorcey, Bobby Jordan, Huntz Hall and Gabriel Dell; and two in which Bela Lugosi will be starred. Others will be "Dangerous Money," an Edmund Lowe starring vehicle; "Isle of Terror," dramatic penal island story; Jack London's "The Trail of the Yukon"; and "You Can't Beat the Law," filmed partly inside California's San Quentin penitentiary.

In the planning of many of the new pictures, topical themes are being taken from the headlines of the day. Thus "Black Dragons," starring Bela Lugosi, deals with the deadly Japanese national secret society.

"She's in the Army" has as its background the wartime activities of the Women's Ambulance and Defense Corps of America, and includes the participation of hundreds of its members.

The story of "Hot Rubber" is based on the present tire situation in the United States. "Let's Get Tough" emphasizes the theme of patriotism, and the effect of the individual attitude on the national effort. Another example is "Ferry Command," which deals with the aerial transportation of planes across the Atlantic, to bolster the fighting forces of the allies of the U. S. A.

WHITNEY UNIT CITES RECORD; ASKS SENATE FOR $5,250,000

Details of Expenditures in 18 Months of Operation Prepared for Committee

The motion picture division of the Office of Inter-American Affairs is confident that cultural interchange via the screen, both commercial and non-theatrical, has been one of the most effective instruments of the "good neighbor" policy.

What is more, the film unit, headed by John Hay Whitney, is getting ready to fight for the continuance of its program. After spending $1,700,000 during its first year and a quarter, according to an authoritative Washington fiscal source, the films section is seeking a thumping increase in its appropriations. The projected budget for the next fiscal year, beginning June 30th, already plans outlays of at least $5,250,000 and may top $6,000,000.

The film division meanwhile, reportedly with the full approval of Nelson A. Rockefeller, coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, is marshalling statistics and statements on its activities since inception in January, 1941. These were to be presented in rebuttal to an inquiry into the Latin American film program by the Senate Committee Investigating Non-Essential Government Expenditures.

Details Requested by Senators

Senator Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia, chairman of the committee, recently asked the Rockefeller office, and all other principal government agencies for full reports on their publicity and or propaganda activities via press, radio and motion pictures. Senator Byrd, Senator Millard Tydings and other members of the group have shown special interest in Government motion picture appropriations in general, and the South American program, one of the largest, in particular.

Details of how the motion picture unit of the Rockefeller office spent its funds during the first year, and what it accomplished have been submitted to Washington by Mr. Whitney and his staff. The report also outlines what the film division would like to do next year, and how much money it would like to do it with.

Senator Byrd, and other members of the committee, declined to be quoted for the record on their preliminary investigation, but it is indicated that they will go into the film report in detail when hearings start. Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Whitney and other division heads probably will be called to Washington to answer questions about the mass of information on their activities now reported to be in the Senate committee files.

Activities Cover Triple Program

A three fold program is described for the Senators' information, embracing the Inter-American film division organization, Hollywood liaison, and educational non-theatrical and propaganda films. Reorientation of the 16 mm program since Pearl Harbor, to place increased emphasis on hemisphere defense and counteract Nazi film propaganda was described in MOTION PICTURE HERALD May 2d.

Operated by Staff Of 35 Persons

Mr. Whitney's staff is estimated to number approximately 35 persons, described as experts in particular branches of motion pictures. The group includes Kenneth MacGowan, former 20th Century-Fox producer; Sheldon Dick, documentary producer; Philip Dunne, screen writer, and others.

It is asserted that the majority of the 48 pictures actually shipped to Latin America to date, and of the 100 or more titles in preparation, have been secured for the Government by adopting existing footage, theatrical and commercial. The division spends Government money for direct production only as a last resort, it reported.

Edited, Translated By Museum Library

These pictures have been edited and translated by the Museum of Modern Art Film Library at New York under a contract with the Government agency at an average cost of $1,096 per reel. This, the unit points out to the Senators, is a substantial saving against an estimated cost of $7,000 to $10,000 per reel if they represented new production.

The Museum to date has received approximately $125,000 for its services. Salaries of translators, technicians, editors and direct processing costs are also charged to the Government.

Available Footage Saves on Costs

The South American films unit points with pride to what it describes as vast savings to the Government through the use of existing film footage. The report cites editing and translation costs ranging from $200 to $4,300, noting that original production would have cost up to ten times as much. Films which the unit actually is producing range in cost from several thousand dollars to a top of about $15,000 per reel.

Savings to the Government through waived music, and patent royalties are also pointed out to the Senators, with emphasis. RCA has waived processing royalties on the Latin America films and similarly the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, American Federation of Musicians, phonograph record manufacturers and Hollywood music publishers have waived usual film charges.

The rights to Latin American distribution of some of the 16mm short subjects have been obtained from Hollywood, and in some instances major distributors have borne the translation cost, it is reported. Similarly many commercial firms, including canners, aircraft makers, bus companies, steel firms, medical and scientific societies, makers of biologicals, false teeth and aluminum have given free footage to the project, and often paid for Government prints of their films. About 25 films have been garnered from other Government agencies.

Committee Supervision Called Effective

The Rockefeller unit describes its Hollywood subsidiary, the Motion Picture Society for the Americas an "all important voluntary censorship over all American motion pictures in their relationship with the other Americas" through the Hays office and a committee of foreign managers as a "particularly effective" way of putting the United States' best screen foot forward in South America.

The division notes that since it was first authorized by executive order in October 1940 Hollywood has released 18 features, and 27 short subjects on Latin American themes. The division in no way claims direct credit for any of the pictures, which include such titles as "Blood and Sand," "That Night in Rio," "Hold Back the Dawn," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Carnival in Rio" and a miscellany of short subjects ranging from travelogues to "Peace, by Adolph Hitler," a March of Time reel.

Industry's Investment $20,300,000

These pictures, it is remarked, with others produced, in production or contemplated since inception of the motion picture division, represent investments of about $20,300,000.

The Orson WellesRKO film expedition to Rio de Janeiro to make "It's All True" has been directly underwritten against loss by the Government, to the extent of $300,000. Other such guarantees for production in South America are being negotiated. Walt Disney has been promised $150,000 against possible deficit on 12 of his releases which have South American backgrounds. Other companies are producing 24 short subjects for and about Latin America, for regular theatrical distribution, at the behest of the Coordinator's film unit.

Newsreel Agreement in Operation

A newsreel project has brought about the inclusion of much material about Latin America in the five companies' weekly Spanish and Portuguese releases, it is asserted. Up to 65 per cent of material now going Southward in the newsreels shows the hemisphere defense effort. Pathe News and News of the Day are making special assignments for the division at an estimated cost of $10,000. About 45 subjects are to be made. The unit has also contributed another $8,000 to the assignment of news cameramen to South America.

Goodwill tours of South America, which last year brought some sharp criticism on the heads of some Hollywod enmissaries, are still a part of the unit's program. It has fostered such projects as a recent pilgrimage by a Hollywood entertainment caravan to Mexico, the Orson Welles visit to Rio, the Disney tour and other star visits.

A contract with the Walt Disney Studios, Inc., calls for the production of special subjects for non-theatrical Latin American distribution. One of the first of these pictures is an agricultural project in preparation with the help of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Half a million dollars is allocated to this project, one-fourth for research, $400,000 for production. Also Mr. Disney is preparing a three reel color photography and animation record of his South American tour, to cost about $45,000.

Production of military and anti-Axis subjects is being greatly expanded by Mr. Whitney's unit. For titles such as "Hitler, the Anti-Christ," "Nazi Biographies," "The Nazi and Catholic Youth," and others, describing the successful American war effort, appropriations of $325,000 have been made. About $75,000 of this will pay for writing talent.

Technical assistance in the production of non-theatrical short subjects by the Brazilian government is being supplied by the division, the Senators have learned. The project, considered a vital part of the good neighbor program, will cost about $100,000. Similar projects are under discussion with Argentina, Mexico and other nations.

Future Expenses Budgeted

To distribute its non-theatrical pictures in South America, through the cultural attaches of U. S. missions and through local committees, schools and educational societies the Coordinator plans an annual expenditure of $150,000. Of this $76,000 has already been approved, and $18,000 spent to date. Another $40,000 worth of projectors are on order. The 48 pictures now in Latin America, and the 100 more which the unit hopes to have there by mid-summer will be shown on these 100 new machines, distributed through seven regional offices.

Print orders on each subject distributed by the unit, both in South and North America have averaged about 30 prints. Eventually the division expects, the report said, to average 130 prints. The largest orders will be for pictures about South America, destined for non-theatrical distribution. Several hundred prints have already been ordered on the unit's first picture about South America, "Americans All," filmed by Julien Bryan.

The cost of prints, containers and accessories for next year is estimated at $400,000.

Distribution expenses for non-theatrical films planned for circulation in the United States are estimated at $50,000. To date $10,000 has been spent to show "Americans All" and other of the titles about South America reported previously.

Producer Wins Libel Definition

A libel is committed if the production of an inferior motion picture is falsely attributed to a producer, Federal Judge Vincent T. Leibell this week ruled at New York. The court refused to dismiss a second cause of action in a $300,000 damage suit brought by Earl Carroll against Paramount Pictures. The decision, however, did not pass judgment on the truth of the charges but specifically held that Mr. Carroll had a good cause of action, if he could prove it.

In his first cause of action, Mr. Carroll claims that Paramount breached a contract with him in failing to give agreed production values to its film "A Night at Earl Carroll's." Secondly, the plaintiff asserted that Paramount libelled him by refusing to cease publicizing the film, allegedly inferior in quality, as having been produced by Mr. Carroll. "The asserted false imputation to plaintiff, a well known producer, of the production of an inferior work that injures his position as a producer in the professional and theatre world, is libelous per se," the court opined in upholding the complaint's cause of action.

Mechanic Purchases Baltimore Theatre

Ford's theatre, for 71 years a landmark in Baltimore has been purchased from the A. L. Erlanger estate by Morris Mechanic, Baltimore motion picture theatre owner. The Ford theatre is a legitimate house. John D. Little, resident manager of the theatre since 1936, will continue in that capacity.

Mr. Mechanic bid the building in at a sale held in surrogate's court, New York, where the Erlanger estate is in probate, with the presiding judge acting as auctioneer. The price was $50,000 for the building alone and there is a $75,000 ground rent.

Clarence Farrell, theatre operator of Ellensburg, Washington, has taken management of the Liberty and Pix theatres there, to be operated in conjunction with the Audian and Mid-State theatres.

RKO Signs Cliff Edwards

Cliff Edwards, who was the voice of Jiminy Cricket and Jim Crow respectively in Walt Disney's "Pinocchio" and "Dumbo," has been signed to a long-term contract by RKO. He will appear in six Tim Holt westerns.

Talbot Heads Committee

Ralph Talbot, head of Talbot Theatres, Tulsa, Okla., has been named chairman of the findings committee, appointed as a research group for the citizens committee on war appeals in Tulsa.

Howes Joins Warners

Wally Howes has been added to the sales force of the Warner Bros. New York exchange under Roger Mahan, branch manager.

War Subjects Favored in Product Plans

War themes and related subjects continue to receive Hollywood attention in studio production plans. This week RKO reported that "Army Surgeon," starring Jane Wyatt, Kent Taylor and James Ellison, dealing with the U. S. Army medical corps, would go before the cameras. Something new in medical films, the picture will be produced without a single medical operation sequence.

Universal recently signed Constance Bennett to play the title role in "Madame Spy." Columbia announced that "Petticoat Army," a new picture to be filmed with the same group of young players gathered together for "Parachute Nurse" was on its schedule. "Petticoat Army" will have to do with women in national defense work.

Merchant Marine Picture Set

Warner Bros. has given "Heroes Without Uniforms" an important part in its production program. The story of men in the merchant marine will feature Edward G. Robinson, George Raft, Humphrey Bogart and Sydney Greenstreet. Gene Fowler is writing the screenplay and Jerry Wald will produce the picture with the cooperation of the merchant marine. Guy Gilpatric wrote the original story.

Headed by director Jean Negulesco, a Warner Bros. production unit arrived in New York last week to set plans for the filming of two shorts featuring the bands and glee clubs of the Military Academy of West Point and the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Dudley Chambers, of the Warner music department, accompanied the crew. Both shorts are being produced by Gordon Hollingsworth. Three other one-reelers featuring the U. S. Army, Navy and Marine bands are being discussed by the company's executives and Government officials, it was said.

Guerilla Leader Hero of Film

The life story of Draja Mihailovich, Jugoslav minister of war and Nazi-fighting guerrilla leader, will be brought to the screen by 20th Century-Fox as "The Seventh Column," it was announced in Hollywood last week. Bryan Foy is scheduled to produce the film. Rights to use the patriot's story have been obtained by the company from a relative in San Francisco, it was reported.

"Salute to Sahara," based on the diary of a British soldier in the African campaign, will be Brian Aherne's first assignment under his Columbia contract. Glenn Ford will co-star. Charles Vidor will direct for producer Harry Joe Brown.

At a meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association held in Hollywood last Thursday night, Lieut. Commander A. J. Bolton discussed the cooperation independent producers might expect from the Navy and at the same time, the producers informed the Navy what cooperation they would give.

'STAMP AND BOND DAY' TO LAUNCH THEATRE DRIVE

Goal of $100,000,000 Set for Year's Sale of Securities by Nation's Exhibitors

The motion picture industry's theatre drive for bond and stamp sales to swell America's war chest will be launched officially on May 30th, with more than 15,000 theatres, representing Main Street and Broadway lined up for participation in what is expected to be the industry's greatest money-raising achievement on record. The goal of the theatres' division of War Activities Committee is $100,000,000 worth of bonds in 12 months. The campaign is to continue for the duration of the war.

With May 30th designated as Movie War Stamp and Bond Day in New York State by Governor Herbert H. Lehman's official proclamation, the campaign will get under way during a "preview" rally on the 29th, in New York's Times Square. In his proclamation, which other state Governor also are expected to issue, Governor Lehman declared: "The motion picture theatres of the country will begin on May 30th an energetic continuous selling campaign of United States War Bonds and Stamps. Bonds and stamps will be sold at the theatre boxoffices and in the lobbies. All of the employes of the theatres will serve as salesmen for the bonds and stamps." He urged the public to buy bonds at theatres "regularly and often."

Citations Ready For Theatres

The Treasury Department, anticipating large returns from the drive, is preparing to issue engraved citations to every participating theatre which will bear the signature of Secretary Morgenthau. These citations, to be awarded when bond-stamps sales total $100, according to War Activities Committee, will pay tribute to the theatre and, at the same time laud the patrons of that theatre who purchase war securities.

New York's film leaders and those motion picture stars who are in the city on May 29th, will set off the nationwide campaign at the Times Square rally which is planned as the "let's go" signal for the drive. The rally was discussed on Monday in New York at a meeting in the office of Si Fabian, campaign director. Mayor LaGuardia will head the speakers' list.

WAC reports that a number of exhibitor groups throughout the country have arranged to have separate divisions in Memorial Day parades in their cities and towns, calling attention to the campaign. Other cities will have bond selling rallies in public squares, some on Friday, the 29th, to avoid confusion with Decoration Day celebrations.

"Dandy" War Bond Sale $300,000

More than $300,000 in war bonds sales, each bond entitling the buyer to a ticket for the world premiere at Warner Bros. "Yankee Doodle Dandy" at the Hollywood Theatre, May 29th, is reported by the local War Savings Staff of the Treasury Department in the first five days following the announcement of the bond-premiere. The figure includes sales up to late last Friday, with expectations by the Treasury staff that it would be more than doubled over the week-end as the sale gains momentum. First purchaser of a bond for the opening was Mme. V. K. Wellington Koo, wife of the Chinese Ambassador to Great Britain, who bought a $1,000 bond from Mrs. Douglas Gibbons, chairman of the ticket committee. Al Jolson purchased $25,000 in bonds for two seats at the premiere.

A street carnival in front of the Hollywood Theatre on Broadway the evening of the picture's debut, will be held under sponsorship of the New York War Savings Staff. Called the "Allied Nations War Bond Rally," the carnival will feature bond sales booths. Foreign departments of the staff will participate.

Chicago Circuit Heads Discuss Relief Drives

Circuit leaders and exhibitor representatives held a meeting in Chicago last Friday to discuss various drives such as the War Bond and Stamp campaign in theatres, the Army and Navy Emergency Relief, USO and United China Relief. John Balaban, Jack Kirsch, James E. Coston, Edward Silverman, Jules Rubens and Arthur Schoenstad were present.

TESTIMONIAL TO R. C. PATTERSON

Richard C. Patterson, Jr., chairman of the RKO board, will be honored the evening of May 18th, in New York's Hotel Astor, by a testimonial dinner from New York executives of all affiliations. Mr. Patterson is New York State chairman of the War Bond Drive. At the dinner, the Treasury Department will inaugurate a "manhunt" for high salaried executives who will serve for a dollar a year. It wants from them "irrevocable and enforcible" pledges that they will give full time to promote sales of bonds and stamps. Among the honorary committeemen sponsoring the Patterson testimonial are Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Governor Herbert Lehman, Bruce Barton, Frederick E. Crane. Mr. Patterson will receive, at the dinner, the Twenty Seventh Annual Distinguished Service Award of the New York Young Democratic Club, Inc.

Geraghty Made Producer

Maurice Geraghty has been made a producer at RKO.

USO Launches Drive; Studio Group Meets

United Service Organization launched its war fund drive for $32,000,000 on Monday, to support its greatly expanded program of providing recreational and entertainment facilities to the U. S. Armed forces, both here and abroad. USO plans to have 900 clubhouses and smaller units in operation by the end of the year. At the same time, Louis B. Mayer, of MGM, national vice-chairman of the USO campaign, was the principal speaker on Monday night in Hollywood at a mass meeting of USO campaign workers, at 20th Century-Fox studio. This meeting marked the opening of the drive in the film capital.

The national USO war fund campaign was signalized by a radio talk Monday night, given by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who spoke for 15 minutes over the Mutual Broadcasting System from the Stevens Hotel, Chicago. His words were carried to 1,500 meetings throughout the country. Mr. Rockefeller doubled his last year's contribution of $100,000 to USO this year.

Dinner Held In New York

In New York, the drive got under way at the Hotel Astor with a dinner and entertainment attended by 2,000 persons. Mayor LaGuardia and Thomas E. Dewey were guests and Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, commanding general of the Army air force, was the principal speaker. Following the addresses, a special USO-Camp Show production, arranged by Harry Delmar, director of Camp Show productions, was presented. On the program, a number of screen, stage and radio personalities participated, including Bert Lytell, who was master of ceremonies; Stan Kavanaugh, the Gae Foster Girls, Marlene Dietrich, Lawrence Tibbett, Jane Froman and Claude Thornhill. New York's quota is $4,450,000.

In addition to Louis B. Mayer, those who were scheduled to speak at the Hollywood-USO campaign meeting were William Koenig, industry chairman; Edward Arnold, Rosalind Russell, Lieut. Cmdr. George O'Brien and Lieut. Ronald Reagan. The first showing of "Mr. Gardenia Jones," a one-reel film dealing with the work of the organization for servicemen, was held.

Last Thursday, in New York, 25 chairmen and co-chairmen of the entertainment and sports division of the Greater New York USO campaign held their first luncheon meeting at Toots Shor's restaurant. Jack Cohn of Columbia, coordinator of the division, presided. Spyros Skouras was one of the speakers.

$3,000,000 Theatre Drive for Army-Navy Relief

Parades, Collections Start Nationwide Campaign for Service Relief Funds

More than 15,000 theatres in the nation, including every one of the 900 motion picture houses in the New York area, were to launch the campaign for Army and Navy Emergency Relief on Thursday. Under sponsorship of the War Activities Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, the drive will enlist the support of approximately 3,500 more theatres than the total of 10,500 which joined in the March of Dimes infantile paralysis campaign to raise $1,500,000, according to WAC.

Although no quota has been set for Army-Navy Relief, it is expected that theatres throughout the country will raise $3,000,000 for the families of soldiers, sailors, Marines and Coast Guard fighting men.

By the end of last week, WAC reported that 11,998 theatres had pledged to participate, a new high for cooperating theatres in money-raising activities, it was said. The rush of pledges resulted in an additional 4,000 trailers sent out by Consolidated Film Laboratories and National Screen Service, making 14,500 in all. Exhibitors were urged to return the special trailer in which Gary Cooper makes a direct appeal to film audiences, to National Screen exchanges, as the salvaging of those trailers was expected to add another $1,500 to the fund.

Parade Opens New York Drive

A military parade on Broadway, New York, at noon, Thursday, signalized the beginning of the drive in that city. Highlight of the parade was the appearance of Lieut. John D. Bulkeley, one of the war's greatest heroes. New York welcomed the young Naval lieutenant who distinguished himself in the Pacific as commander of the Navy's PT torpedo boats. Secretary of the Navy Knox informed Nicholas M. Schenck, national chairman of the drive, and Stanton Griffis, chairman of the citizens' committee for Navy Relief, that he approved Lieut. Bulkeley's participation in the parade.

Similar events on a spectacular scale were arranged in other cities from coast to coast. Participating in the Broadway parade were 1,000 soldiers and an Army band, hundreds of sailors, 900 members of the American Women's Voluntary Service, and 27 Power girls, professional models in costume, who carried the flags of the 27 United Nations.

Mr. Schenck and Mr. Griffis were grand marshals of the procession. Members of the AWVS volunteered to help make collections in motion picture theatres beginning Thursday.

In addition to theatre collections, the industry will make donations through its Hollywood studios, film exchanges and the home offices.

Collections for the Army and Navy Relief Drive began in all New Haven theatres May 14th and continued through the week, with I. J. Hoffman, Warner Theatre department head there, as state chairman, and Harry H. Shaw, Loew-Poli Division Manager, as chairman for New Haven County. Lou Brown, Loew-Poli publicity chief, is in charge of publicity, assisted by John Hesse, manager of the Roger Sherman, New Haven. Matt Saunders, manager of the Loew-Poli, Bridgeport, heads the Fairfield County theatre activities with: Fred Greenway, manager of the Palace, Hartford, Hartford County; J. R. Pickett, manager of the Capitol, Williamantic, Windham County; Joseph Miklos, manager of the Palace, Norwich, New London County; Erenst Doreau, manager of the Middletown theatres, Middlesex Coutny, and J. J. Scanlon, manager of the Warner, Torrington, Litchfield County.

The same executives head state and New Haven county activities of the national War Bonds and Stamps campaign, and are asking all houses to cooperate in special displays and the running of trailers.

The local "Sign Up for Victory Campaign" opened with a Woolsey Hall rally, at which Charles Kullman, Metropolitan Opera House tenor, and native of New Haven, sang.

EXHIBITOR SETS PACE FOR SERVICE DRIVE

How the small-town theatre exhibitor helped to launch the industry's theatre drive on behalf of Army and Navy Emergency Relief, and to set the pace for cooperation of civic and patriotic groups in his town, was demonstrated this week by Ray Pashley, manager of the Lakes Theatre in Interlaken, New York. Max A. Cohen, chairman of the New York State committee of the campaign which is sponsored by 15,000 theatres throughout the country, reported this week that Mr. Pashley, in addition to contributing the entire evening's gate above actual operating costs, on Thursday night, to Army and Navy Relief, spurred the efforts of civic and other organizations in his town and surrounding areas to help in the cause.

Acting Mayor N. E. Boyce of Interlaken, proclaimed the week of May 14th-20th, as Army and Navy Emergency Relief Week. On the morning of the 14th, school children from Interlaken, Ovid, Lodi and Willard, joined with Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts in a parade through the town, which was followed by appropriate talks by leading citizens. The local Girl Scout troop launched a house-to-house canvass for funds, and boxes for donations were put in all business places in the village.

Star Caravan Expected to Hit $750,000 Gross

Hollywood Victory Caravan was expected to gross between $600,000 and $750,000 before its wind-up Tuesday, following its playing to capacity audiences in 13 cities across the country.

The show took in $317,000 in Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago, last week, half-way through its cross-country trek in behalf of the Army and Navy Relief Fund.

On its appearance in Chicago, at the huge Stadium last Wednesday night, it pulled $90,000, not only topping the receipts of the Boston date, which were the highest until Chicago, but chalking up a record of playing to the largest receipts ever garnered on one theatrical performance in that city.

Stars Sell Kisses At Benefit

More than 19,000 persons saw the show, paying a total of $87,009.97 for tickets. The house was sold out and several hundred standees paid $2.20 each for the privilege of seeing Hollywood's star-caravan. The sum was increased to $90,000 following the sale of kisses by Claudette Colbert, Cary Grant and Merle Oberon. One prominent Chicagoan paid $1,000 for a Colbert kiss, while Merle Oberon collected $500 for one, and Cary Grant and Bob Hope collaborated in a double header which a woman purchased for $700.

The publicity committee responsible for the widespread publicity given to the Chicago show was headed by William K. Hollander, Balaban and Katz publicity chief; three of his staff members, Archie Herzoff, Dorothy Deere and James Savage; and Larry Stein, Warner Theatres' circuit; Irving Yergin, Vitagraph, Inc., and Norman Kassell of the Essaness Theatres' circuit.

Eddie Silverman was chairman, and John Balaban and James E. Coston, co-chairmen of the amusement division committee.

On Friday night, more than 12,000 persons paid about $40,000 to see the caravan show at the Municipal Auditorium in St. Louis. About 1,200 of the spectators stood during the three-hour performance which was a sell-out days before. A parade of the stars in downtown St. Louis, preceding the show, was seen by 5,000 persons. Harry C. Arthur, Jr., was theatre contact for the Caravan. In Des Moines, last Sunday night, the Caravan grossed $25,902 at the Shrine Auditorium.

Downey Lauds Industry's War Work

On Monday, in Washington, U. S. Senator Sheridan Downey of California bestowed high praise upon the motion picture industry when he told the Senate of Hollywood's efforts to swell contributions for Army and Navy relief. The Senator predicted that by the end of the tour $750,000 will have been raised. He reviewed the Caravan's successful tour, from its start in Washington, at Loew's Capitol theatre on April 30th, and he also referred to the motion picture theatres campaign which began on Thursday for service relief funds.

BOX-OFFICE DISLOCATIONS SPREAD WITH BLACKOUTS

Theatres Report Varied Effect on Business; Gas Rationing Seen Factor

The war with all its vicissitudes is coming closer to home to the exhibitor, who having trained his staff in air raid precautions, cooperated with authorities to the greatest extent, and prepared his house for any eventuality, is now looking at business records of the months past, wondering to what extent continued blackout tests and public preoccupation with defense duties will affect his boxoffice.

He also faces further dislocations from this week's gasoline rationing, from restrictions on public use of transportation systems, and from "staggering" of the working hours and vacations of employes of large business enterprises.

One thing stands out, after several months of war: blackouts and air raid drills reduce boxoffice income. In New York City borough tests, the police department has even ordered persons off the streets producing in the drills thus far a catastrophic drop in receipts.

Another factor seems salient: small town exhibitors are receiving less, large towns more, from the war. The apparently simple explanation has been the flow of industrial workers to the larger centers, and the conscription of rural young men.

Receipts Down in Chicago Area

Small theatres and small town theatres in the Chicago exchange territory report adverse business, ascribing it to the draft, preoccupation of women with defense duties, and migration of labor to industry.

Theatres dependent upon car trade assert fewer are coming.

Business in the city itself, however, has been level.

Loop theatres say business is off on weekdays, but increases on weekends.

Warner theatres in defense areas report better intake; those in Chicago, less.

Soldier Patronage Increases Grosses

Northern California theatres are prospering. Soldier patronage is the factor, as well as a lack of blackouts recently. Additionally, good transportation systems are expected to counteract restrictions on automobile use, as well as the slump in vacation travel which may come in other sectors.

Seattle theatre attendance has increased since December 7th, from 15 to 25 per cent; and these estimates are termed conservative. The gain is reflected in the whole Northwest Pacific territory.

Government reports indicate 80,000 new Seattle residents.

Most first run theatres in that city are holding films two weeks. Houses previously dark, are open. Extra morning shows for war workers, are a success. There are many late night shows. Some theatres run 24 hours daily.

San Antonio theatres report increased grosses, and it is said war has practically eliminated unemployment. The better business is said to be caused by numerous army camps as well as boom times. Restrictions on automobile use is thought to have actually increased business in some sections. The benefits are reflected in the Mexican areas also. Vaudeville is popular.

Matinees Show Some Increase

Oklahoma City indicates that restrictions on auto travel are having effect on theatres. Grosses on quality films are good, but not as high as they once were. On the other hand, matinee business shows an increase.

The smaller towns in Oklahoma complain that business is down, except for Saturday nights, when farmers still come in. Population losses in smaller towns, the result of shifts to war industries, are said in some instances to have mounted to 30 per cent.

Changeover of the wood-working industries in Grand Rapids, Michigan, to war production, has resulted in the closing of one theatre, the Powers, operated by Roy Taylor. The workers are idle during the shift.

War Themes Prove Most Popular

It is noted the demand in films has changed. Those with war themes are now preferred. "Top" drawing room dramas have failed to attract.

Rhode Island theatres report being badly hit by the dim-out regulations ordered by Army officials for the New England coast. Marquee lights and signs are banned, except in Providence. Cities reporting bad business are Newport, Westerly, and Narragansett.

Lack of attendance at Boston theatres is becoming a matter of comment. The city is in the grip of drastic blackout regulations. Street lighting is minimum. Store windows are darkened. General Daniel Needham, of the Public Safety Committee, said last week the dimout was not adequate, and greater steps were coming.

However, theatres have obtained from the Boston division of the Committee, permission to use 50 per cent of normal lights under the marquee. The permission, nevertheless, has been variously interpreted by local police captains, and several ordered theatres to totally blackout marquees.

Gasoline Rationing Effect Awaited

Gasoline rationing was awaited with apprehension this week.

New York Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine last week appointed a five-man committee to study the dimout, and drew up definite rules which will obey the Army orders, up to now interpreted differently in various sections of the city.

Illustration of the latter is that while upright signs in the Times Square area have been darkened, they have not in other sections, notably Union Square.

Night baseball and other sports in open fields are to come under the committee's study.

Manhattan Blackout Cuts Business

The 20-minute test blackout of upper Manhattan last week reduced receipts for theatres from 25 to 40 per cent. Forty-five theatres, catering to 750,000 persons, were affected.

Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia said Monday nightly blackouts, not dimouts, were possible. He added the Army might order them. And he said the possibility was dependent upon success of borough wide drills.

The Bronx borough was blacked out Monday night. Eighty-eight houses were affected, serving 1,300,000. Brooklyn was to darken Wednesday night. Two hundred theatres are there, serving approximately 2,500,000 persons.

Philadelphia, Washington Have Blackout Tests

Philadelphia's first regional partial blackout was started Monday and continued in a different section of the city through Thursday. The blackout was partial in that it was not enforced on industrial plants, nor were street or alley lights extinguished, nor did street traffic and radio stations halt as they would in the event of an actual air raid. However, all homes, schools, institutions, business establishments and all places of amusement including theatres were required to extinguish all outside lights and provide screening so that lights within were not visible from the street.

Washington underwent its second blackout Tuesday night.

There are a few localities in the Kansas City area that have extensive defense production projects, and training schools. In these places, notably Wichita, patronage of theatres is large; several houses holding open till 4 a.m. for night workers, two nights a week. In very many smaller towns, however, theatres have sharply reduced patronage because of draining of workers to centers of activity and to the services. The situation is, however, now in process of change; many projects are expected to be located in this area, spotting it with war production enterprises; which, while perhaps further draining the smaller communities, will keep the increased income closer to home bases.

Many a small town, in Kansas and Missouri, has seen hundreds, even thousands, of its young men leave. The young women lack escorts to the theatre and the older people, especially those on the farms, are not much inclined to theatre going.

The limitations on automobile use have further complicated the patronage problem. Most county-seat and larger-town theatres draw normally from 20 and 30 miles; this patronage is off materially because of limitations on autos.

In both cities and small towns, patronage

Dim-outs Spread Dislocation of Theatre Business

has tended to concentrate on week-ends—perhaps because car owners limit use of cars to this period. The traditional practice of going to town on Saturdays continues in the smaller communities; but the crowds are smaller, chiefly because of the reduction in number of young men.

Canadian theatres, generally, report better business in this war.

Montreal, a center of war industries, is a boom town for theatres despite their increased tax load. Weekend receipts are unusually encouraging. However, the tax situation is viewed with foreboding.

Heavily increased business is also the lot of most theatres in the Maritime Provinces. Virtually every town reports an improvement, with Halifax leading.

In the instance of the latter, its population has trebled since the war began.

The theatre business there is the best in its history. This, despite, the highest prices ever.

Toronto theatres last week did excellent business during a blackout during which streets were deserted. Some neighborhood theatres suffered. Exhibitors indicated, however, business would have been better if the blackout were not a surprise.

St. Louis downtown theatre men say the staggered store and office working hours are a business stimulant. The system enables workers to remain downtown and shop, and enter theatres before going home. Under the system, devised to relieve transportation mediums, most workers downtown are freed between 4:30 and 4:45 P.M.

The Rochester War Council has enlisted theatres in acquainting the population with the purport of recent defense measures. Under present plans, speakers from the Council will speak simultaneously from theatre stages, periodically. The first speakers were to talk on rationing Friday.

Universal To Supply Films To Veterans' Hospitals

The U. S. Veterans Administration has awarded Universal Pictures' non-theatrical department a contract to supply features and featurettes in 84 Veterans Hospitals and soldiers' homes throughout the country. The contract is for one year, beginning July 1st.

Thomas to Russellville

Jack Thomas, manager of Malco theatres at Clarksville for the past several years, has assured the management of Malco theatres at Russellville, Ark. He succeeded Hiram Meeks, who is now managing the Malco houses at Hope, Ark.

Emil Boehm Promoted

Emil Boehm, formerly in the ad sales department in the Warners exchange in Chicago, has been promoted to head of the contract department there. Louis Shayne, who was Mr. Boehm's assistant, also moves up to the post of ad salesman.

Elect Malin Mayor

W. E. (Bill) Malin, owner of the Lura theatre in Augusta, Ark., and president of the Arkansas Independent Theatre Owners, has been elected mayor of Augusta. Mr. Malin has been in the film business in Arkansas for more than 33 years.

"Gas" Registration Begins In the East

Owners of approximately 8,000,000 automobiles in the East went to local schools Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, to register for, and receive, cards entitling them to units of gasoline, according to type card. It was estimated one-third of the motorists would receive "A" cards, entitling them to approximately three gallons a week, under the seven units to be delivered them between Friday, when rationing was to begin, and July 1st, when an improved rationing system, probably with coupon books, is to take effect.

The one-third of the motorists are presumably those who cannot prove they need drive more than six miles daily.

Theatre owners awaited the effect of rationing with mixed feelings. Some who regarded the motor car as an amusement competitor, saw a boom. They were the ones, also, who had seen people from their neighborhood depart via automobile for an attraction in a competitive theatre miles away. "Drive-in" theatres were the ones regarded certain of extinction, depending almost wholly upon car trade.

Seattle Defense Program Tested

Seattle's theatre defense program, accepted as an example of perfect planning, was given an actual demonstration last week at Hamrick-Evergreen's Blue Mouse theatre, with approximately 1,000 usherettes, cashiers, doormen, theatre managers and other employees of Seattle and suburban theatres in attendance. Clarence R. Innis, director of the theatre branch of the Seattle municipal defense council, presided at the session.

In the event of a blackout or air raid, all theatres in the Seattle area will be notified by a telephone hook-up radiating from the switchboards of the Hamrick-Evergreen and Sterling Chain circuit offices. From these focal points all theatres, ballrooms and other places of entertainment will be notified.

All Seattle theatres have been equipped so that upon receiving a blackout signal, exterior curtains can be closed, outside lights extinguished and the show continue inside. Should the lights fail, emergency battery-operated equipment is available to illuminate the auditorium, stage and foyer of the theatres, so that orderly evacuation may take place if required. Slides advising patrons of the situation and instructing them regarding their departure have been furnished to all theatres.

A mock panic was staged at the Blue Mouse as part of the meeting planned by Innis. Usherettes on duty posted themselves conspicuously near the exits, shining their flashlights on the floor. Exits were quickly opened, while slides directing the evacuation were flashed on the screen. The theatre was readily emptied in a period of about three minutes.

The Seattle theatres' defense program has been widely publicized, and requests for a complete outline of this plan have been received from many Pacific Coast and mid-West cities, where the same procedure is being adopted, Mr. Innis said.

Olsen Named Export Manager

W. C. DeVry, president of the DeVry Corporation, announces the appointment of Norman D. Olsen as export manager. Mr. Olsen formerly handled the DeVry United States distributor-dealer relations.

Goodman to Atlanta

Manny Goodman, formerly with the Warner Bros. home office sales department, has been transferred to the company's Atlanta office.

War Increases Grosses in Key Centers

Theatre grosses have shown marked improvement in key metropolitan centers since the entrance of this country in the war, a survey by Motion Picture Daily shows. In contrast, smaller communities reported declining grosses, attributed largely to the drafting of young men and the migration of workers to industrial centers. Many industrial cities have doubled their population, with resultant box-office gains, while in smaller locations population losses have been reflected at the box-office.

In rural and agricultural districts, the survey shows that tire and gasoline restrictions have kept many farm families from attending the theatres in neighboring towns to the accustomed extent.

In the New York area, the key runs have shown improvement but the neighborhood houses report a falling off of business.

In the area served by the key city of Omaha, the bigger towns are operating normally but the smaller communities have suffered box office losses. In the larger cities, also, the evening increase in business has more than offset a drop in day time trade.

Around Minneapolis a sharp increase in suburban box office income is reported while the rural districts are off. Attendance gains were reported in St. Paul and the area around Duluth.

In Connecticut, New Haven, Bridgeport, Hartford and New London report general improvement in box office income in the downtown sectors but the neighborhoods are off because many people go downtown for their entertainment.

Better product is credited in Baltimore as helping business in addition to the increasing influx of workers to war projects. Weekend business, particularly has improved.

Population Increases 20,000 in Tacoma

Savannah shows normal business following a decline which occurred immediately after December 7th. The box office curve is up in the Cincinnati territory since January 1st, caused by an influx of new population.

Tacoma, whose population has increased by about 20,000, reports excellent business, as do Providence and Newport. The trend is up in Milwaukee, but not in proportion to the increase in population caused by war conditions, according to exhibitors.

Philadelphia business has turned upward following an early winter slump. There are four theatres in the city operating at present on a 24 hour basis.

Business is slightly better in and around Nashville but the smaller Tennessee communities are off because of tire rationing and the depletion in population caused by draft requirements.

Buffalo also gives credit to good product besides war industries for its improvement in box office income. Des Moines, however, reports little change for itself, but the smaller communities have been affected adversely, with the small towns off as much as 15 per cent.

$200,000 Jewish Appeal Goal

The amusement industry on Tuesday lent its support to the United Jewish Appeal when 500 leaders in show business launched the industry's campaign to raise $200,000 with a luncheon meeting at the Hotel Astor.

David Bernstein, vice-president of Loew's; Barney Balaban, president of Paramount, and Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Brothers, are chairmen of the film industry's drive. Herman Robbins of National Screen Service was chairman of the luncheon committee. Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland, one of the national chairmen of the United Jewish Appeal's 1942 war emergency campaign, was the principal speaker. He urged support for the three agencies affiliated with the United Jewish Appeal—the Joint Distribution Committee, the United Palestine Appeal and the National Refugee Service.

Mr. Bernstein, called for immediate support for the Appeal. "In every part of the overseas world, in Palestine and even here in our own country," he declared, "the agencies of the United Jewish Appeal are bringing new life and new hope to a people which was the first to feel the lash of the oppressor. We can never let them down."

Mr. Balaban promised that a determined effort would be made to see that every one in a position to advance the work of the cause will be given opportunity to contribute.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

Esteemed Editor:

Warfilms produced since December 7th are beginning to pop up for preview and may or may not reveal as yet fully the pattern of the production effort in this direction which the nation is to be given to feed upon.

The best of three such attractions previewed last week is Republic's "Remember Pearl Harbor," an ingeniously contrived melodrama which generates tension at about midpoint and attains a velocity between there and the finale which had a dozen case-hardened tradepress observers firmly under control and pleased about being that way.

Universal's "Escape from Hong Kong" and Monogram's "Let's Get Tough" are the other two items in the sock-the-enemy vein, impressing in that order.

The three express in common certain attitudes with regard to the enemy which, for that reason, may be of interest as possibly indicating a stance.

All three present the Jap as the Number One enemy and portray him as a crafty but essentially incompetent and by no means formidable foe.

Each of the three pictures has one or more German agents in it, working in collaboration with the Japanese who are the principal wrongdoers, and each portrays the German as an individual of a perceptibly higher order.

None of the three contain characters representing Italy nor dialogue references to that member of the Axis group.

It is not of record that producers have got together and decided upon a "line" to follow in their filmings, nor that they have been furnished one.

It is possible that no more than coincidence accounts for the unanimity of attitude reflected in these three pictures, which are after all but three.

This is, however, the line that is being fed out to the populace in the product coming up for attention at this point.

Tradefolk hereabouts are looking forward with interest, as this is written, to a preview of a motion picture screen so to speak, which is to be given at the Pantages theatre this week Wednesday to an extensive guest list representing all phases of industry endeavor.

The object of interest is known as the Retiscope Motion Picture Screen and is described as "revolutionary, hypobolic-parabolic in shape, same as the retina of the eye, from which it derives its name." It is a product of the Owens-Corning Fiberglas corporation of Toledo, Ohio, and your communicant's next dispatch will relate the outcome of the presentation of the device to the invited observers.

You'll be recalling, doubtless, that the field of exhibition was stirred for a time, back in about 1925, by tales of the wonders to be wrought by use of a concave screen which the manufacturer built to the measure of the individual theatre upon order and on the premises.

The argument in favor of that one was that the convex curvature of the frontal surface of the lens in the projector, which corresponded to the curvature of the eyeball, required a precisely equivalent concave curvature of the surface of the screen if complete naturalness of image were to be achieved, complete value of projection beam to be utilized and a maximum of illusion to be attained.

It cost a lot to build the things and a lot of exhibitors built them, which cut into the business of the various vendors of flat screens quite some.

AVERAGE WEEK

Production level moved up from 34 to 36 in an average week, with seven pictures starting and five going to cutting rooms. Possibly most interesting of the new undertakings is "Sherlock Holmes Saves London", Universal, in which Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce portray the Conan Doyle detective and doctor with whose personalities, via radio, theirs have become virtually synonymous.

So one or more of the vendors of flat screens instructed field agents to remind exhibitors that the film which bears the image to be projected is flat on both surfaces, after absorbing which item of familiar but momentarily forgotten information a lot of sheepish showmen quietly dismantled their concave screens and charged up the loss to experience.

Harry Sherman, whom the ladies and gentlemen of the press fondly address as "Pop," has taken typewriter in hand to suggest to film reviewers that they abandon "the prevailing custom of referring to western pictures as horse operas." He says, "Many great artists in the various branches of writing, acting and production pour their talents into making these highly entertaining films, and to pass them off so lightly is to discount the intelligence of the vast audience they entertain."

A kindly and experienced gentleman, "Pop" has singled out no individual offenders but has put his case gently if firmly before the whole of the critical personnel in a letter dispatched to each and all.

He remarks, for instance, "Western pictures have been from the beginning of the industry, and still are, for a majority of the theatres in the United States the so-called bread and butter pictures and the profit pictures. Many community theatres make no profit at all on society dramas and 'artistic' pictures, but depend upon the family trade which comes to see westerns to pay their rent of the theatre and make the living expenses of the exhibitor."

He reminds them, "The three highest paid actors the industry has ever known were William Farnum, Tox Mix and William S. Hart. They were Western stars."

Finally he asks them, "would it be asking too much to solicit your personal interest in this problem and to ask that as much credit be given Western pictures as is given any other kind of photoplay?" and adds, "The thousands of people engaged in producing, distributing and exhibiting western pictures will be grateful to you for your support, not overlooking the millions of fans who genuinely like their entertainment in this form."

"Pop" will get plenty of cooperation from the press people, in whose esteem he holds a particularly special place.

Certainly it was never the critics who brought about the trade practice of lumping such items of merchandise as "six Tim Holts" or "eight Don Barrys" for advertising and sale to exhibitors who, having acquired them a la peas in a pod, are hardly to be berated for advertising and selling them to their customers that way.

"Pop" Sherman just possibly may not know that the rank and file of Hollywood's resident correspondents welcome a preview of a Western picture as a refreshing and altogether delightful break in the round of "society dramas and 'artistic' pictures" which clutter their calendar.—W. R. W.

Independent Wins New Appeal Board Decision

25th Ruling Upholds Award of Clearance Reduction in New Orleans

The Appeal Board again ruled in favor of the independent exhibitor and against a long established circuit this week when it upheld a New Orleans award. Also in New Orleans another exhibitor won a some run victory, while the clearance plea of an Ohio circuit was dismissed. The week's new case was filed at New York City seeking the elimination of clearance between theatres on opposite sides of the Hudson River.

New Orleans

The Appeal Board in its 25th decision on Monday upheld the reduction in clearance granted the Ashton theatre in New Orleans by Philip B. James, arbitrator, and reaffirmed its insistence that independent theatres be protected against booking delays on the part of houses with a prior run. The appeal judges found that the award directing Paramount, Warners and RKO to reduce the clearance of United Theatres Circuit's Poplar theatre from 60 to 10 days was justified.

The 60 day margin granted to the circuit house in the past was characterized by the board as "arbitrary and unreasonable." They also directed that William A. Fonseca and Sons, operators of the Ashton, receive pictures not later than 75 days after New Orleans first run, as protection against booking delays by the Poplar.

The judges also affirmed the arbitrator's dismissal of MGM from the action after the distributor had protested that it did not have any contracts with the complainant. Voluntary withdrawal of the complaint against 20th Century-Fox was also upheld. Costs were assessed against the remaining defendants and United Theatres, Inc., intervenor.

The some run complaint of the Lakeview Theatre Company, New Orleans, in behalf of its suburban Lakeview theatre was also settled Friday in an award by T. W. Bethea. It was the city's fifth case. The awarded dismissed the complaint as to Paramount, the arbitrator finding that the company had offered a reasonable run within the meaning of Section VI. Warner Brothers and RKO, however, were ordered to offer some run to the new Lakeview on terms not calculated to defeat the some run section of the decree.

Cleveland

The clearance complaint brought at Cleveland by the Tuscarawas Amusement company against all five distributors for its State and Ohio theatres in Uhrichsville, and Lincoln theatre in Dennison was dismissed at the final hearing May 6th by Charles Buss, the arbitrator. The Shea circuit had intervened for its New Quaker and Union theatres in New Philadelphia and Bexley and State theatres, Dover, Ohio.

New York

The Dutchess Amusement Operators, Inc., filed New York's 36th case in behalf of the Beacon theatre, Beacon, N. Y. The clearance demand against All Five named the Netco circuit's Ritz and Broadway theatres in Newburgh, on the opposite bank of the Hudson river. It asked elimination of the 14 day margin in favor of Newburgh on the ground that the two towns are not competitive, and requests equal availability after national release for all three theatres.

Buffalo

The 14th and 15th Buffalo clearance cases against All Five, the Little Three and the Schine circuit filed by Murray Briskin for his Capitol theatre, Homer, N. Y., and the Corona theatre, Groton, N. Y., were reported settled at a hearing before William E. Barrett, arbitrator, on Tuesday. Parties agreed to a stipulated award, it was said. The two actions were obtained last week.

St. Louis

The Wehrenberg-Kaimann Circuit of St. Louis, owners of the Cinderella Theatre, has intervened in the clearance complaint of the Princess Theatre against the five distributors. Adolph Rosecan had named the Cinderella as interested party. Hearing on the complaint, No. 9, was scheduled to start Thursday, (May 14). Kenneth Teasdale, a lawyer, will arbitrate the case.

The Wellston Amusement Company, operators of the Wellston theatre, has intervened in the clearance complaint of the Beverly theatre. The St. Louis Amusement Company was named as interested parties in this case, No. 10.

Chicago

First hearings on the Times theatre, Danville, Ill., clearance complaint, the 16th Chicago case, were held May 11th. The Times, a new $100,000 house which opened last August, is seeking to reduce the clearance granted three Publix-Great States theatres, and one independent theatre in the town. Now the first-run theatre has a 60-day clearance over the second run houses, of which there are two, and the Times, a third-run spot has to wait 14 days after the end of the second run.

Arthur Goldberg, of Spitz & Adcock, representing Paramount Pictures, Inc., and the Great States circuit, cited the fact that such clearance had been in effect, in Danville and towns in the surrounding area, since 1929.

The Freeport theatre, Freeport, Ill., case No. 15, is being held over until May 23, due to previous commitments of the arbitrator.

Balaban and Katz have intervened for their Tivoli and uptown theatres in the 17th Chicago case filed by the Palace theatre, Gary, Ind.

Westinghouse Electric Has Two Health Films

Two new films for non-theatrical distribution, dramatizing the efforts of science to help maintain wartime health, are being released by the visual educational section of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company at Mansfield, Ohio. To portray scientific research in the field of nutrition, a 17-minute picture called "V-Men," shows the actual laboratory tests which determine the effect of different cooking methods on natural vitamins in vegetables.

The other picture, a 26-minute film in color, "40 Billion Enemies," explains the basic principles of refrigeration which affect the health-giving qualities in foods. The films are available at Westinghouse distributor or district offices.

5-WEEK CHICAGO CLEARANCE CUT TO 24 HOURS BY AWARD

Arbitration Ruling Upsets Established Zoning System; Wide Effect Seen

Chicago's elaborate system of zoned availability was threatened with far-reaching readjustment in favor of suburban independent exhibitors last week after an arbitration decision changed the boundary line between so called "city release" and "country release" zones.

Thomas C. McConnell, ruling on the clearance demand of the Wheaton Theatre, Wheaton, Ill., against all five distributors, found that the clearance of approximately five weeks held by the Arcada theatre, in St. Charls, Ill., eleven miles away, was unreasonable. He cut the clearance to 24 hours, disregarding the zone boundary lines and basing clearance on the individual competitive situation. It was Chicago's 13th case.

His award took cognizance of the fact that it would change the clearance relations between complainant and many other theatres within the Chicago city zone. Although it changes the zone boundary between the Wheaton and St. Charles theatres, the line's definition as between other theatres "is primarily a distributors' problem," the arbitrator ruled.

Theatre Located on Boundary Line

The Wheaton Theatre, located 27 miles west of Chicago, on a point designated by the distributors as the boundary line between the Chicago and country release systems, charged that the Arcada Theatre, located 11 miles further west in St. Charles was being given unreasonable clearance affording the latter a competitive advantage.

The five distributors contended that Wheaton play dates were governed by the Chicago Clearance System, that they ran in the "C" prerelease week or nine weeks after the conclusion of the first run loop showing. St. Charles' run was governed by Aurora, Ill., which plays immediately following the Chicago first run. With St. Charles privileged to play 14 days after Aurora this gave St. Charles an advantage of approximately 5 weeks over the Wheaton Theatre, many of whose patrons, it was asserted, travelled to St. Charles in order to see pictures earlier.

"The case is important," Mr. McConnell noted, "not only to the parties involved, but to the public and to the exhibitors of motion pictures generally."

The method in Chicago of establishing clearance by a zone and run system, in weekly categories, may face a complete overhauling, some observers declared after reading the decision. Its designation of availability according to a number of weeks after Loop run has been the object of frequent and furious attack by independent exhibitors in the past. Currently the issue is before the federal courts in an anti-trust suit filed by the Ken theatre. The Ken lost an attempt last year to bring about a readjustment through arbitration.

CLEARANCE BY ANOTHER NAME

Licenses do not have to mention clearance by name, Thomas C. McConnell ruled in the 13th Chicago case, in order to establish a margin between competitive houses within the meaning of the decree. He found that while licenses under the Chicago release zone method do not specifically establish clearances, they do so in effect. Different sets of contracts create, in effect actual clearance between the Wheaton and Arcada suburban theatres he found.

"Any other interpretation would lead to the result that the Distributor, by merely avoiding any reference in the contracts to the actual effect so occasioned, can create actual clearance between theatres, the reasonableness of which cannot be arbitrated. This would obviously vitiate the provision of Section 8 of the Consent Decree, and reasons of sound public policy dictate a construction which will broaden rather than limit its application," he wrote.

As to whether or not the demarcation line of the two releasing systems, as between St. Charles and Wheaton, is reasonable, the opinion says, "From all testimony it is reasonably clear that the system worked out is one that, by and large, will yield the most revenue to the distributors, and any changes will then mean the loss of revenue to them. However, this cannot be the sole criterion of the reasonableness of the boundary. The interest of exhibitors and of the attending public are entitled to some weight in determining whether it is reasonable."

It was the opinion of Mr. McConnell that changing the present boundary line between the two theatres was not so inimical to the interests of other exhibitors and the distributors as to demand the preservation of a line of demarcation which created unreasonable clearance between the two theatres involved. He said that the definition of the new boundary, created by the award, was primarily "a distributors problem" and that they probably could appease the conflicting interests of the intervenors to their mutual satisfaction without the necessity for further arbitration.

"Interest of Public Must Be Factor"

Where there is doubt as to the fairness of an arbitrary line dividing zones the arbitrator expressed the opinion that "it must be resolved in favor of the manifest interest of the public to see pictures at the earliest possible release date commensurate with the reasonable protection of the distributors business and the investment of competing exhibitors."

"This of course represents a balancing of interests which cannot be measured with any degree of mathematical certainty," he said. "It is at best an approximation of the equities involved, but in the instant case it is the opinion of the Arbitrator that changing the present boundary line between these two theatres is not so inimical to the interest of other exhibtors and the distributors as to demand the preservation of a line of demarcation which creates unreasonable clearance between the two theatres involved."

Testimony Convinces Arbitrator

While contracts did not show that the Arcada Theatre was given clearance over the Wheaton Theatre the arbitrator was convinced through testimony, that such clearance actually existed because of the two systems of release.

"However, the effect of the two sets of contracts," he wrote, "is to create an actual clearance in favor of the St. Charles theatre over the Wheaton Theatre of approximately five weeks. The result is occasioned by the fact that the Wheaton Theatre is licensed under a system of Chicago release and play in pre-release C week, or ninth week after the conclusion of a picture by the first run Chicago Loop theatres. . . . "

It is the conclusion of the arbitrator that jurisdiction to arbitrate the resulting dispute as to clearance is vested under Section VIII of the Consent Decree.

The award orders that "the maximum clearance between the Arcada, St. Charles, and Wheaton, Wheaton, Ill., created by a system of licensing motion pictures in the Chicago Arbitration District, shall not exceed 24 hours, so that the said Wheaton Theatre shall have the privilege of exhibiting motion pictures 24 hours after the conclusion of the exhibition of such motion pictures at the Arcada Theatre, St. Charles."

Complainant's filing costs and the arbitrator's fee were assessed against the five distributors.

Intervenors were the Balaban & Katz Corporation, operating the Tivoli, Downers Grove, and La Grange, La Grange, Ill., George J. Kappus, operating the York Theatre, Elmhurst, Ill., and the Lombard Theatre Corporation, operating the Lombard Theatre, Lombard, Ill.

Blumenstock Heads Public Relations Unit

A long-range public relations program for the motion picture industry, primary objective of which is to correct "public misconceptions" of the film industry, will be handled by a planning committee set up last Thursday in New York by the Eastern Public Relations Committee. Mort Blumenstock, in charge of advertising and publicity in the East for Warner Bros., is chairman of the new unit. Announcement of the appointment was made by Robert M. Gillham, chairman of the Public Relations Committee, following its weekly meeting.

Serving with Mr. Blumenstock will be Howard Dietz, MGM vice-president in charge of advertising and publicity; Kenneth Clark, publicity director of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Glendon Allvine, secretary for the EPRC.

Information to Give 'Better Understanding'

The new unit will aim at the correction of wrong impressions and their replacement with better information concerning an understanding of the industry, as well as public relations policies which will keep the industry abreast of changing times, it was reported. The proposed survey of theatre audiences and attendance, announced earlier by the Eastern Committee, will be made a part of the planning committee's activities. The group held its first meeting Monday at Dinty Moore's in New York, and initial steps were taken towards effecting the long-range program. The sub-committee was to make is first report concerning the various projects to the Public Relations Committee on Thursday, at the New York Athletic Club.

One of the principal topics of discussion by the group last week was the use of reviewers' star or other rating symbols in advertising. It was intimated that the distributors' share of cooperative advertising might be denied repeated offenders on the grounds that the use of the symbols in ads is detrimental to the best interests of the business, and if generally employed would serve to brand the bulk of product which does not receive the maximum number of symbols as inferior entertainment. The committee has protested use of the star symbols in the advertising of Harry Brandt's Globe Theatre, New York. Loew's and RKO neighbhorhood theatres also used the star system in their ads, it was said.

Freston, Goetz AMPP Directors

The new list of directors of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, issued in Hollywood last Thursday, revealed that Herbert Freston, one of the industry lawyers' Committee of Six now engaged in reshaping public relations policies, is a member of the AMPP board, replacing Jack L. Warner as representative of Warner Bros. William Goetz of 20th Century-Fox, also is listed as a new director, replacing Joseph M. Schenck, representative of that company.

B. & K. Managerial Changes Made

With the resignation of William Briscoe, manager of the Cine theatre, Chicago, several managerial changes have been made by the Balaban and Katz circuit. Hones Sawn, assistant manager of the Nortown theatre, succeeds Mr. Briscoe as manager of the Cine. Charles Beaubien is acting assistant manager of the Nortown. Ralph Ermilio has been transferred from assistant manager of the Belpark to assistant manager of the Harding. Fred Baron, formerly a senior usher, is acting assistant manager of the Belpark.

Mr. Briscoe, who was with the Balaban and Katz organization for 13 years before his resignation, is now manager of the Ridge theatre, operated by the Bartelstein circuit. He suceeds Robert Templar, who will be assigned to another house.

Altec Signs With Schine, Gibraltar

Contracts have been signed for continuance of Altec Service to the Schine Circuit, calling for sound service and repairs and replacements to the 131 Schine houses. The deal was negotiated by Guy Selmser for Schine and Bert Sanford for Altec.

Gibraltar Enterprises, Inc., operating theatres throughout Colorado, Nebraska and New Mexico, has signed an agreement with Altec renewing sound and repair-replacement service on six theatres, and has added 14 additional houses to the Altec list. B. W. Ardell negotiated for Altec.

He succeeds William Harwell, Ohio manager, transferred to Portsmouth, Ohio, as city manager for the three houses in that situation. Harold Olds, Majestic manager, moves to the Madison. No successor has been named for the Majestic post.

Named to Defense Council

Cecil D. Miller, manager of the Ritz Theatre, has been named co-director with Elbert W. Baker, city manager of Evergreen theatres, of the theatrical unit of Spokane's Civilian Defense Council.

Minnesota Law Appeal Fades

Possibility of an appeal by the state of Minnesota against a Ramsey County Court, St. Paul, ruling that its anti-consent decree law is unconstitutional, appeared more remote this week, as the state attorney's office, and exhibitors who backed the law, survey the costs of a legal battle.

The state has indicated it has no funds for such purpose. Minneapolis exhibitor circles display a lack of enthusiasm for supplying the funds.

Advancement, in New York, of revision of the United Motion Picture Industry's sales plan, which is itself a revision of the decree, is regarded as another argument against further legal moves in Minnesota. Many exhibitors are said to feel the new plan an improvement over the decree.

Under the Ramsey Country Court's decision, exhibitors and the state have two months in which to object.

Detroit Defense Opens

The case for the Cooperative Theatres circuit of Michigan is being presented in Detroit Federal Court this week, the case of the plaintiff, the Carmen Theatre, that city, having been completed last week.

It is an anti-trust suit against the circuit and seven distributors.

In Chicago Federal Court, hearing was to be held Friday, in the Ken Theatre's $300,000 damage suit against the majors and the Balaban and Katz circuit; a suit which also is to decide the legality of the Chicago zoning and availability system.

The five day meeting ended with three technical sessions, one on 16mm, the second a general session, and the final session on sound. Edward H. Plumb of the musical department of the Walt Disney Studio said that developments with Fantasound should result in advances in sound recording and reproduction when the application of the new developments will be practicable after the war.

G. L. Beers of RCA Laboratories, H. R. Lubcke of Don Lee Broadcasting System, and R. B. Fuller and L. S. Rhodes of Marsch Cinesound discussed various aspects of television, including cameras, and the production of 16mm films for television.

HOLLYWOOD COLUMNS 23rd IN NEWSPAPER POPULARITY

26% of Women Readers and 12% of Men Turn to News of the Screen

Hollywood columnists rank 23rd with women readers and 26th with men in a list of forty-five continuing features published by American and Canadian newspapers, according to the latest summary of the Continuing Study of Newspaper Reading conducted by The Advertising Research Foundation in cooperation with the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Among these features, the picture page has the greatest readership. Editorial cartoons place second. Comics and Oddity Panels are well read by both men and women, but the female reader is as interested in the leading "obit" as she is in comics.

Columnists such as Louella Parsons, Hedda Hopper, Jimmy Fidler and John Chapman with a total readership of 26 per cent are read more widely by women than are the New York, the political and the local columnists. Twelve per cent of the male reading public read the same columns.

This conclusion of the Foundation, which is sponsored jointly by the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers, summarizes the study of 42 daily newspapers, ranging in size from eighteen to fifty-six pages, in circulation from 8,500 to over 250,000, with a combined circulation of more than 3,400,000 copies.

18,000 Interviews Basis of Study

In determining the public's preferences, A. W. Lehman, technical director of the Foundation, compiled data from more than 18,000 nationally distributed interviews in cities from coast to coast and from Houston to Montreal. Larger cities where interviews were conducted include Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Atlanta, New Orleans, Milwaukee, Newark, Rochester and Portland, Oregon. Residents of typical smaller cities such as Johnstown, Pennsylvania; Phoenix, Arizona; Windsor, Canada; Terra Haute, Indiana; Rutland, Vermont; Wheeling, West Virginia; Manchester, New Hampshire and Cedar Rapids, Michigan, were also interviewed.

As a result of these interviews, which represent an accurate cross-section of the United States and Canada, Mr. Lehman discovered that more people read one or more amusement advertisements in their daily newspaper than read the radio programs or radio news. Taken as a whole, advertising is the most interesting service feature of newspapers, he pointed out.

Entertainment Ads Rate High Readership

Ninety-five per cent of the women read one or more advertisements of some kind or other, except classified, daily. Their interest in amusement advertisements, in which the motion picture industry is the chief space buyer, equals their attention to national advertising. From the female point of view, the survey notes, advertisements selling entertainment hold more interest than editorials or sport news or pictures.

RURAL AND URBAN TASTES SIMILAR

Although different income-occupation groups show definite preferences for different portions of their daily newspaper readers in large and small cities demonstrate about the same interest in the various types of content, according to the Continuing Study of Newspaper Reading. The widest differences are found in the reading of society news, radio news and classified advertising. Readership of death notices, weather, society pictures and classified advertising is noticeably higher in small than large cities, while banner stories receive more readership in large than in small cities.

Men Read More Film Than Store Ads

On the same basis, more men read one or more amusement advertisements in their daily papers than read the same number of department store ads. In their reading habits, more male eyes are attracted by motion picture advertisements than by society stories or pictures, according to the figures of the summary. Forty-four per cent of the male readers stop at amusement ads, as against 42 per cent arrested by society items.

Of special interest to motion picture advertisers is the Foundation's disclosure that the percentage of readers interested in amusement advertisements is almost the same in large and small cities. Based on a comparison of sixteen newspapers published in cities of under 100,000 population and eleven published in cities of over 300,000, it shows that the interest of male readers in such advertisements varies but 5 per cent, ranging from 43 per cent in smaller cities to 48 per cent in the larger. Among the women there is no difference whatever, 60 per cent perusing the amusement advertisement in both classes of municipalities.

Surveying Income Groups

Amusement ads appeal to all women to the same extent, except those in the highest income-occupation group which averages 50 per cent in reader traffic, as contrasted with a mean of 59 per cent for the other three brackets. With men, interest in entertainment advertising trends upward as the income scale decreases. Persons with income of $5,000 or more were placed in Group A; Group B included those whose income limits were approximately $3,000 to $5,000; those earning between $3,000 and $1,200 were contained in Group C, and people with wages less than $1,200 in Group D. The readership of the different groups is shown in the following table:

	Men Per Cent	Women Per Cent
Group A	34	50
Group B	37	59
Group C	43	58
Group D	52	60

In this grouping, married women who were not working were classified according to the incomes of their husbands.

Concerning the position of advertisements in the newspapers, the survey dispels a popular fallacy by asserting "Notwithstanding the possible concentration of 'good' advertisements on left or right pages and the small number of cases, the data showed that advertising performance was about equal whether the advertisement was on a left or right page."

In regard to size of advertisements, the report states that the percentage of people stopping to read an advertisement increases as the size of the advertisement increases.

Of all the photographs contained in newspapers, war and defense news pictures hold the greatest appeal for men; women like photographs of weddings and engagements just as well as they like pictures of war and defense. Pictures of motion picture, theatre and radio celebrities are examined by 56 per cent of all women readers and 34 per cent of the men.

Forecast Radio Shifting To San Francisco

Dedication of the National Broadcasting Company's new $1,000,000 "San Francisco Radio City" last week was accompanied by an indication of future radio activity in the San Francisco area. Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network and KGO, which will share the new building with KPO and the Red network, forecast shifting of numerous nationwide commercials to San Francisco.

Mr. Woods said sponsors and agencies already were considering the city as a logical origination point because of its key position as relay point for Pacific war news, and its heavy war industry program and post war expansion possibilities.

John W. Elwood, former chief of NBC's international division in New York, and originator of many programs designed to counteract Axis radio propaganda, has been named KPO and Red network manager, succeeding Al Nelson.

Price, MacLeish Warn NAB on War Policies

Radio Executives Hear General Rules on Censorship and Programs

Radio broadcasters gathered at Cleveland Monday through Thursday, in a convention made peaceful because of the war. Habitually discordant issues were omitted, or lessened in impact and, in his annual report to the broadcasters, assembled as the National Association of Broadcasters, Neville Miller, president, avoided controversial topics.

The new contract with the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers, will save the radio men $40,000,000, Mr. Miller predicted. Of the demands of conscription upon the radio industry, he noted one of five commercial technicians now in the armed forces, and predicted adding of 200,000 more in the six months coming.

Give the patrons comprehensive news about the war, but use the "rule of reason," Byron Price, national censor, urged. He placed final responsibility in dissemination of news, upon broadcasters. This especially applied to commentators, he noted, and remarked upon "speculation and prediction which makes itself the vehicle for smuggling of dangerous information."

Mr. Price reasoned that voluntary cooperation, rather than governmental regulation, in wartime broadcasting, depended upon success of radio men in keeping military information from the enemy; and he added:

"To those who are trying to keep information from the enemy, the magnitude of radio as a facility of communication, is appalling."

The Government and radio came to an emergency agreement a "little too quickly" and agreed "a little too easily," and therefore do not "altogether understand some of the bases," according to Archibald MacLeish, director of the Office of Facts and Figures, and a speaker Monday.

Mr. MacLeish believes the Government in war "has certain things to say to the people" and agreed the radio was an important means of saying these things to them.

That the Government plans drafting radio so that every program today will be affected, was disclosed Tuesday by William B. Lewis, assistant director of the Office of Facts and Figures. On that day, too, from Major General Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service Director, came warning that radio station managers would not receive deferment.

Would Warn Against Panic

A warning against panic in expected air raids, was sounded by Colonel Ernest R. Dupuy, of the War Department Bureau of Public Relations, who cited Tokio's panic, the reason for which, he asserted, was the city's lack of preparation to combat incipient fear by radio.

He added that the American bombers rode along the beam of a Tokio radio station; further, that the station announcer, after warning hysterically of the raid, broadcast a description, giving the airplane pilots the results of their work.

NEW NETWORK ON EAST COAST

A new radio chain has appeared, the Atlantic Coast Network, comprising WNEW, New York, key station; WCOP, Boston; WNBC, New Britain; WELI, New Haven; WPEN, Philadelphia; and two unselected stations in Baltimore and Washington. Arde Bulova, watch manufacturer, is reported financially interested. Head of the network will be Harold A. LaFount, former Federal Radio Commissioner, now in charge of Bulova radio interests. Mr. LaFount confirmed the news at the NAB convention in Cleveland.

An additional $1,500,000 is being spent by the Columbia Broadcasting System for programs dealing with the war, including newscasts, short wave coverage, and special programs, according to William S. Paley, the System's president.

Present as an observer was Fred Weber, general manager of the Mutual Broadcasting System, which last year, after dispute over validity of Federal Communications Commission ruling on alleged monopoly in radio, withdrew from the NAB.

Mr. Weber urged the NAB to avoid controversial issues.

The NAB war committee met Monday evening, followed by the Labor Relations Clinic.

Prior to the opening, committees met, representing these categories: sales, executive, general, research, engineering, code, wages and hours, accounting, labor.

At luncheon Monday, the board of directors of Broadcast Music, Inc., met. The firm is a music publisher, established by the broadcasters two years ago to supplant, and now presumably to rival, ASCAP.

Other board meetings that day were those of the NAB's bureau of copyright, and of the NAB.

WGY, Schenectady, on Monday won the William B. Lewis award for the most effective education of an audience, in the war effort. Its award was in the super-power class. Others who won the Lewis awards, were WAAB, Boston, regional class; WIBX, Utica, local.

Paley Warns Against A "Dictator" FCC

In testimony last week before the House Interstate Commerce Committee hearing arguments for and against the Sanders bill to limit Federal Communications Commission powers, William S. Paley, CBS president, warned that a "resourceful" FCC "might well devise ways to seize control of every phase of radio broadcasting, regardless of present prohibitions." He added that Congress should "specify a legislative framework for radio, which is in harmony with the constitutional guaranty of free speech."

The freedom of radio today is at least as important as freedom of the press, he contended. And, he insisted:

"Regulation by the FCC should stop at physical requirements. There are laws on the books covering the conduct of broadcasters as well as of other business men, and there are Governmental departments charged with bringing to the courts for punishment and correction violations of these laws."

John J. Burns, CBS counsel, charged FCC members not participant in its monopoly investigation had signed its regulations covering networks. Dr. Frank Stanton, CBS research director, challenged the Mutual network contention it could not obtain CBS outlets.

The hearings resume next Tuesday.

The War Production Board's radio section is now headed by Frank H. McIntosh, of Toledo, formerly technical supervisor for the Fort Industry Company, that city. The company owns several stations.

Milwaukee Approves Machine Licensing

The Milwaukee Common Council by a vote of 18 to 8 has passed the Michalski ordinance licensing coin film and other amusement machines, overriding Mayor Carl F. Zeidler's veto.

Machine distributors will be required to pay a $25 annual license fee and places where the machines are installed will be assessed $5 per machine. It is reported that nearly 5,000 licenses for all types of machines will be sought. The annual revenue is estimated at between $175,000 and $200,000 a year. Licenses will run from the first of July each year.

Eastman Kodak Reports Officers' 1940 Salaries

The Eastman Kodak Company, in an amendmend to its 1940 report, has informed the Securities and Exchange Commission that Frank W. Lovejoy, president, was paid $163,125 in that year. Albert F. Sulzer, vice-president, was paid $71,312 and the company paid $96,450 towards his retirement annuity. Thomas J. Hargrave, vice-president, was paid $71,375.

G.E. Sets Welding Film

An all-color six-part film, "The Inside of Arc Welding," produced by General Electric, is expected to play an important part in speeding up the training of thousands of metal arc welding operators needed for the making of ships, tanks, aircraft and other war equipment. The first part of the picture, complete in itself, is now available to public, private, industrial welding schools and other groups. The other five parts will be ready early in June.

Tyson in New Post

George Tyson, publicity director for the Harris Amusement Company, Pittsburgh, has resigned as producer of the annual Atlantic City "Miss America" pageant to devote all his time to the Arena Managers Association, of which John Harris is president. Mr. Tyson will be executive director of the AMA and general manager of Ice-Capades, Inc. Robert Russell will succeed Mr. Tyson in Atlantic City.

Woman Assistant Manager

Peggy Egbers is Spokane's first woman theatre executive. Elbert W. Baker, city manager for Evergreen Theatres, recently named her assistant manager of the big Fox house. She started with the company six years ago as an usherette, and has held cashier and office secretary positions.

'THE MOON IS DOWN' HEADS APRIL STORY PURCHASES

Record Price of $300,000 Paid by 20th Cent.-Fox for Rights to Story

The highlight of story buying for the month of April was the acquisition by Twentieth Century-Fox of the screen rights of John Steinbeck's drama "The Moon Is Down" for the record price of $300,000. This is the highest outright sale on record, although the final purchase costs of other plays, which involved a percentage of the film's receipts, have bettered this mark.

Nunnally Johnson, who did the scenario of Mr. Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath" in 1940, also is slated to write the screen treatment of "The Moon Is Down." In novel form the book has sold close to 500,000 copies in two months and tops the best-selling list and in play form it is currently being presented at the Martin Beck theatre, New York.

Previous record holder was "Lady in the Dark," Broadway hit, for which Paramount this season paid $285,000.

April was a good month for story purchases with 56 properties acquired, which was only one less than purchases for March and 22 more than were purchased in April, 1941. Total number of properties acquired since the first of the year now is 218.

Also acquired in the month of April were the film rights to the music of Nicolai Rimsky-Korsakoff through negotiations with the Russian Government by Boris Morros and S. P. Eagle, 20th Century-Fox producers, to be used in a picture based on an incident in his career as a Russian marine in the last century.

'GOOD PICTURE DOESN'T NEED BLESSING OF CRITICS' STARS'

Critics 'Confuse Public', Hollander, B & K Publicity Chief Charges

by F. L. MORGAN

in Chicago

"The whole idea of motion picture criticism—by newspaper critics—is wrong because of the inconsistencies it develops" was one of the viewpoints expressed by William K. Hollander, publicity head of Balaban & Katz, Chicago, explaining why his company refrained from using rave quotes in their advertising for its Illinois circuits.

"Quoting the raves of critics and columnists to sustain interest in an advertising campaign is a mere habit that has come down to the motion picture business from the legitimate theatre."

Balaban & Katz has successfully refrained from the quote practice for a great many years, says their advertising chief.

"A really good picture helps itself and doesn't need the blessing of a critical bouquet, and an unpopular one can't be helped by raves. After all, newspaper criticism is merely the opinion of one person who might be just as much in error as anyone else in regards to a film's merits, or lack of them. By quoting a critic's good opinion we build up a practice which could be a boomerang when the same critic disliked a picture.

Basic Theme Is Information

"We take the attitude that advertising is for the purpose of informing the public of the emotional and pictorial content of a picture, whether it is designed to thrill them, mystify them, whether its theme is laughter or tenderness. We have found that the public is willing to accept our evaluation of a film's content by virtue of our long experience as theatre operators."

Mr. Hollander who, it might be added, was one of the first motion picture critics in the United States, acting in that capacity on the Chicago Daily News in 1914, believes that motion pictures in general should be reviewed for subject matter and cast, rather than criticized.

"Very often two critics will disagree on the same picture, one will say it is good, the other will say it is not. The result is confusion in the mind of the reading public. They do not know what to believe. If they like the picture's players and the type of entertainment offered, the chances are they will go to see it anyway."

Calling attention to the fact that many pictures which have had the unqualified approval of the critics have died at the box-office, while others they didn't like have proven financial successes, Mr. Hollander opined that criticizing the average motion picture is a waste of time and space.

"By what standards do the motion picture critics of today judge and arrive at a conclusion for their readers? What makes them experts on what the public ought to see, or ought not to see?" he asked. "A critic, like any other film fan, has certain likes and dislikes among players and in stories. This may produce prejudicial opinion which is unfair to the theatregoer. We pay large sums of money to get the people to our box-office, yet we may pick up the same paper our advertisement appears in to find that because that paper's critic doesn't like the picture, he or she has set it down as fact that the readers will not like it either.

'Critic May Be Wrong'

"We must respect difference of opinion in a picture and, of course, we do respect the opinions of the critics even when we do not agree with them, but sometimes a critic may be wrong and that is when he or she can do irreparable harm.

"An adverse criticism serves no particular purpose except, that if effective, it could hurt a valuable piece of property not only for the producer, but for all those exhibitors who play it, as well. I feel, it is far better for a picture to be reviewed, neither praised nor condemned, but its subject matter honestly reported so that the reader may judge for himself whether it is desirable entertainment for him and his family. The newspaper which handles motion pictures in this manner is rendering a real service to the picture public.

Some Films Merit Criticism

"Most pictures do not merit criticism, yet there are ambitious productions such as 'How Green Was My Valley' and 'Gone With the Wind,' pictures of such dramatic and technical scope that they may be looked upon with the same importance as a legitimate stage production and treated accordingly. It is only films of this magnitude that really merit critical attention."

In support of the fact that Balaban & Katz have found critical quotes unnecessary to a successful advertising campaign, the recent 10-week record Loop run of "How Green Was My Valley" was sustained through a series of ads, not one of which used a quote although hundreds of rave notices from all over the country were available.

Sales Personnel Shifts in Field, Home Offices

Principal Moves Involve Warners, UA Following the Transfer of Sears

One of the biggest field upheavals of sales personnel in the industry's history has been occurring as a result of shifts of top home office sales officialdom of some weeks ago.

Principal checkerboard moves involved Warner Bros. and United Artists following a shifting from Warner's to UA of Gradwell L. Sears and Carl Leserman. In this instance, branch managers, division and district managers and salesmen figured in the company changes. Comparatively few shifts of sales personnel of MGM, Paramount, RKO and 20th Century-Fox occurred since the first of the year. Principal upheavals came at Warners and United Artists after Mr. Sears became vice-president in charge of distribution of the latter company.

Following that move, the shifts from Warner's to UA included:

Edward M. Schnitzer, former New York district sales manager for Warner Bros. appointed New York district manager for UA; Harry Herman, former salesman for Warner's at Des Moines, became a UA salesman in Omaha; Fred M. Jack, Southwestern district manager, Warner's, appointed Southern district manager, UA; Rud Lohrentz, Midwest district manager, Warner, named to same post by UA; Sid Rose, Chicago branch manager, Warner, appointed to same position by UA; W. E. Callaway, former Los Angeles branch manager, Warner, now Western district manager, UA.

Other United Artists changes were: Cresson E. Smith, formerly of RKO, made Los Angeles branch manager; Frank Drew, former MGM Cleveland branch manager, appointed branch manager, Charlotte, N. C.; T. R. Thompson, Jr., now district manager for Kansas City, St. Louis and Omaha; Charles Stern, district manager, Boston, New Haven and Buffalo; David H. Coplan, Canadian division manager; John Dervin, branch manager of the Boston exchange.

Promotions at Warner Brothers

Promotions and transfers since the first of the year at Warner Bros. necessitated by the Sears-Leserman shake-up included:

Fred Greenberg, former manager of Indianapolis branch, now manager of the Los Angeles branch, with Claude W. McKean succeeding Mr. Greenberg in Indianapolis. James Moore, former salesman at the Albany branch, took over Maine territory at the Boston branch. Wendell Frederick, promoted from the shipping to the booking department of the same branch. Moe Hirz joined the booking department of the Omaha branch. Jack Dowd, promoted to head booker at Indianapolis. Roger Mahan took charge of the New York exchange as branch manager. Philip Sherman, formerly branch manager at Montreal, transferred to New Haven in the same post. Jack Howland promoted to sales manager, Los Angeles branch. Bill Walsh promoted to city salesman of the same branch. Henry Slater, head booker, moved into the latter's place at Los Angeles. Hall Walsh made district manager in the prairie district. W. O. Williamson, Jr., was made new branch manager, Atlanta, Ralph McCoy named district manager of the newly created southern district. Other Warner changes were: Roy Haines, Arthur Sachson and A. W. Schwalberg, elected vice-presidents of Vitagraph. Joe Zangralli transferred Pittsburgh to booking department, Cincinnati, and Y. Miller, named office manager of the Pittsburgh branch at which zone Nat Marcus was made salesman.

District Managers Shifted at MGM

At MGM, personnel shifts since the first of the year included: E. K. O'Shea, central division sales manager, made eastern division sales manager, while John E. Flynn, district manager of Chicago, Minneapolis, Indianapolis and Milwaukee was appointed central division sales manager, both changes which followed the resignation of Tom Connors, MGM eastern, southern and Canadian sales manager who became assistant to the late Sidney R. Kent, president of 20th Century-Fox, last November.

Also at MGM, Edwin W. Aaron, assistant to William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, was promoted to assistant general sales manager. Sam A. Shirley, city manager at Chicago, made district manager of Chicago, Minneapolis and Milwaukee. Walter E. Banford, country manager, of Chicago, named branch manager at the same city. Jack Sogg, salesman at Cleveland, promoted to branch manager there. Foster B. Gauker, salesman at Indianapolis, promoted to branch manager.

RKO changes in addition to Cresson Smith's shift to United Artists, were: Tom Gilliam, manager of the Warner exchange in Chicago, became sales manager for RKO in the same city and Harold J. Mirisch, of the Warner booking office in Milwaukee, joined the RKO booking department of the home office. In January, Sol Yeager, formerly with Universal, rejoined the RKO sales staff in Omaha.

Sound Playing Dual Role

American sound equipment is playing an important dual role in the war effort below the Rio Grande, J. M. Knaut, international sales manager for RCA Photophone, said this week on his return to New York from a special war check-up of the motion picture theatre field in Latin America.

"Exhibitors in Latin America," Mr. Knaut said "are confronted with the prospect of few replacements in their sound equipment and with growing restrictions on parts and materials." He said that this shortage, due to the war, was strengthening their reliance upon quality American equipment, adding, "We have always had their confidence and theatre men realize it is now fully justified."

Mr. Knaut continued: "Today, well engineered American equipment stands between many an exhibitor and the technical failure of his house. Materials or spare parts are no longer just around the corner. This situation, in which American engineering and manufacturing standards are upholding an economic structure, makes for a stronger Pan-American tie in still another field.

"Linked with this, is the fact that dependable American sound equipment is continuing to make film entertainment possible during a period when it is recognized by governments as a morale essential."

Mr. Knaut said that American film companies were providing invaluable contact between the Americas. Films, such as "Sergeant York" and Hollywood musicals are receiving a big response, he said.

Joyce To Direct Red Cross Theatres

Christopher J. Joyce, theatre manager of Fall River, Mass., was appointed director of the American Red Cross Hospital Motion Picture Service for six southeastern states, it was announced in Washington Monday by Norman H. Davis, chairman of the Red Cross.

Mr. Joyce will direct the organization's program of free motion pictures for convalescent servicemen in 28 base hospitals located in Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi and Louisiana. To date, the Red Cross service has provided free films for more than 350,000 men in hospitals throughout the United States, Alaska, Puerto Rico and Hawaii. A total of 129 hospitals are either showing pictures at present or will be shortly, according to Hampton W. Howard, national director.

Prior to joining the Red Cross staff, Mr. Joyce was manager of the Durfee Theatre in Fall River. He managed theatres in Plymouth, Mass., Norwalk, Hartford and New Haven, Conn. He was formerly associated with Mullin and Pinanski in Boston.

Victor Fleming delivers a resounding directorial performance with the aid of a whopping script. Producer Sam Zimbalist has overlooked nothing to give lovers of better films one of their choicest treats. One of the prize casts of this or any other year.
—Film Daily

Magnificent. Ordinary terms of appraisal are not to be used in evaluating M-G-M's production of John Steinbeck's "Tortilla Flat," and another great novel reaches the screen in the magnificent performances of a great cast. The picture can't miss. A grosser that may be ranked with the smash box-office returns of record-breaking "Boom Town." It can play longer first-run engagements to higher critical praise. "Tortilla Flat" is for showmen who have asked for something off the beaten path. Tracy can stack up this performance alongside the two that won him Academy Awards.
—Hollywood Reporter

A sincere, tender, beguiling and at times exalting picture. It is sympathetically and adroitly adapted, handsomely produced, expertly directed and eloquently acted. With such box-office names as Spencer Tracy, Hedy Lamarr, John Garfield and Frank Morgan, it should do holdover business. It's definitely a quality click.
—Variety

The kind of a picture an exhibitor can be proud to show. Will rank among the top productions of the year.
—M. P. Daily

Calculated to reap a rich box-office reward. Marquee power to assure an audience response in any quarter.
—Daily Variety

A compelling film. It lives on and breathes into almost every scene a set of vivid characterizations, and its forcefulness, plus cast, suggest important class-mass acceptance.
—Boxoffice

Young and old will thoroughly enjoy this pulsing narrative. Star names guarantee good business. It's the kind of a picture everybody will be glad they witnessed. The picture is a masterpiece of art. Tracy has never been better. So finely done from start to finish that it will linger in the memory of audiences for ten times longer than the ten best pictures of the past ten years.

See Gain in El Salvador

The market for the sale of educational films and equipment in El Salvador is small at present but it is expected that the demand will increase slowly in the next few years, as an increase of 112.50 per cent was reported in the showing of educational films during 1941 compared with 1940, according to the Department of Commerce, Washington.

The Department also reports that United States entertainment films are preferred to films from other countries. There are no laws giving films from other countries preference over United States films and as only a small percentage of the films shown were from abroad, the war has had little or no effect upon the Salvadoran motion picture industry. Argentinian and Mexican films are the largest competitors of U. S. pictures.

There are 33 motion picture theatres in El Salvador, with a total seating capacity of 42,051—five being in the capital city of San Salvador. The average weeking attendance is about 144,000. The average admission price is 25 cents. From 400 to 450 feature films are required yearly to supply the market.

All theatres are wired for sound and most of the sound equipment is of United States make, and in comparatively good condition. There are some prospects for selling replacement sound equipment. Two theatres have one projector each, while 31 have two projectors each.

IN THE COURTS

Moscowitz Asks High Court Review

Presenting five points wherein he alleged the lower courts had erred, Joseph H. Moscowitz last week petitioned the Supreme Court for review of the trials in which the Federal District Court of New York and the Second Circuit Court of Appeals held him guilty of attempting to evade and defeat income taxes of Joseph H. Schenck.

Asserting that the issues presented had never been determined by the high court, the petition charged that the lower courts erred in admitting certain Government exhibits purporting to show taxes due, in refusing to limit the issues to business expenses, in failing correctly to instruct the jury, thereby refusing Mr. Moskowitz a fair trial, in excluding the testimony of Revenue Agent Mulligan, called by the defendants, and in refusing to charge the jury as requested, to give weight to character.

"The court below has erroneously decided important questions of Federal tax law and criminal law, which have not been but should be settled by this court," Mr. Moscowitz' brief declared.

Kentucky Sunday Shows Upheld

The Kentucky court of appeals this week declared that Sunday movies are allowable by state law and that no municipality can prohibit them. The opinion rendered by the court upheld an injunction granted L. B. Scott, general manager of a Harlan theatre, to prevent the city from prosecuting him for future Sunday shows.

The opinion, written by Judge Will H. Fulton, said that an amendment to the Sunday laws was enacted in 1934 and declared that the operation of picture shows on Sundays is not to be construed as work or labor within the meaning of the Sunday closing laws and was a plain legislative declaration of policy. The opinion added that since the powers of cities are derived from the state legislature, no municipality has authority to ban Sunday movies.

N. Y. Governor Vetoes Child Actor Bill

Governor Herbert Lehman of New York this week vetoed the Ehrlich bill to repeal restrictions against children under 16 years appearing in films, theatrical exhibitions or radio programs. The bill, which met a similar fate last year, was passed by the legislature without a dissenting vote and had been drafted to meet the objections made by the Governor to last year's bill.

In his veto memorandum, Governor Lehman cited objections by Mayor LaGuardia of New York City, who said he was not opposed in principle but that the city could not assume additional expenses for enforcement which the bill requires.

Sues for Omaha Reopening

The Tri-States Theatre Corporation filed suit in Omaha federal district court on Tuesday against the R. D. Goldberg theatre interests asking $95,000 for damages allegedly suffered by the Tri-State Omaha theatre when the State theatre, Omaha, was reopened and operated from late 1939 to March 21, 1942. The circuit charges that when the Omaha was purchased from Mr. Goldberg in 1934 an agreement was made to keep the State closed for a period of 10 years. Tri-States recently won an injunction suit and the State closed.

Incorporations In New York

In Albany, Michael F. Walsh, Secretary of State, issued papers of incorporation to four motion picture concerns to do business in New York state. They were:

Musician's Status Tops IATSE Meeting Agenda

Alliance Executive Board, District Delegates To Meet Before Convention

Amidst rife speculation about subjects to be discussed and disposed of at the biennial convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, in Columbus, Ohio, June 1st, one topic is regarded certain ot inclusion in the meeting's first "business": the relationship between the Alliance and the American Federation of Musicians. The mutual assistance pact between them was cancelled by the musicians March 15th, after 29 years. The cancellation ended negotiations of 18 months for revision.

Richard Walsh, IATSE president, said in New York last week action by his organization would be exclusively governed by sentiment of the delegates. If they still desire a mutual assistance agreement, the Alliance will approach the musicians again, he said.

James Caesar Petrillo, president of the musicians' federation, indicated in "The International Musician," union magazine, recently, that the Alliance' version of the pact was unsatisfactory, and that the stagehands' version appeared unacceptable to the musicians.

It was noted at the New York IA headquarters that the abrogation of the national pact did not threaten the existence of pacts between locals of the two international unions; nor did it prevent the signing of new agreements between locals.

The Alliance's executive board will meet in Columbus May 25th. Its district delegates will meet as follows: District One, May 29th, 30th; Two, Four Seven, and Eleven, May 30th and 31st; Twelve, May 30th; Three, Five, Six, Eight, Nine, Ten, Fourteen, Fifteen, May 31st.

Other Union Activities

In Hollywood, following ratification Monday evening of the agreement with the producers, the Screen Writers Guild held a victory celebration.

Clerical workers in the New York home office of RKO will vote shortly for a collective bargaining agent, by order of the National Labor Relations Board. The board had been petitioned for such an election, by Local 109, Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, of the CIO United Office and Professional Workers of America. The local already represents clerical workers in most of the distributors' offices in New York.

All candidates on the regular slate were elected by an overwhelming majority at the election held by the Chicago Theatrical Protective Union, Local No. 2, last week. Frank Olsen, secretary-treasurer and business agent, was re-elected, as was Larry Cassidy, president, and William L. Schraut, vice-president. Votes were cast by 338 of the 410 members.

James T. Ryan, Joseph A. Baker, Arthur Morrison and Haney Mandel were elected to the executive board, and Arthur Free, Frank Connor and William Biltgen were re-elected as trustees. All are in for two-year terms.

In Newark, hearings in Chancery Court for a receiver for 1A local 244, have been postponed to May 28th. Six members are asking an accounting of funds, and removal of officials, among whom is Louis Kaufman, business agent, now under indictment by a New York Federal Grand Jury, for alleged extortion of more than $1,000,000 from the major film companies.

Local 702, Laboratory Technicians' Union, New York, says 58 members are now with the armed forces.

The Detroit teamsters' local, 299, has asked film carriers for a 25 per cent wage increase, two weeks' vacation per year, and a closed shop.

Stagehands Ask Wage Increases

In New York, legitimate theatres were involved this week in negotiations with the stagehands' local 1, which is asking pay increases retroactive to February 1st. It was said Tuesday the increases had been granted, but that retroaction was still being argued. The increases amount to four dollars weekly for grips, cleaners, and operators, and five dollars weekly for carpenters, electricians, and property men.

The local elected new officers Sunday night: Joseph Dwyer, president; Bernard Quatrochi, chairman of the board of trustees; George Fitzgerald, vice-president; John C. McDowell, secretary; John J. Garvey, financial secretary-treasurer, and Solly Pernick and Vincent Jacobi, business agents.

Members of Local 1220 of the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (radio technicians), defied the Chicago Federation of Musicians last week when they took over activities in the transcription room of radio station WAIT, supplanting four members of the musicians' union. The action presages a jurisdictional fight between the two groups.

"We feel that we are justified by circumstance and legality in taking our present stand," a spokesman for the electrical workers' union declared, but hastened to add that their action was merely a test case which they hoped the American Federation of Labor's executive board would eventually settle. The radio technicians said they do the radio recording work in all cities except Chicago and St. Louis. The musician's pay scale runs as high as $90 for a 25-hour week; the technicians' scale is less. The work consists of putting on and taking off radio records.

Officers Elected In Pittsburgh

The election returned the union to local autonomy, after being managed for a number of years by a representative of the IATSE, Lawrence J. Katz.

Members of the Pittsburgh musicians' local 60 will reduce their wage scale 20 percent for playing at parties or parades for selectees, president Clair E. Meeder announced.

Balabans Open DeLuxe Theatre in Chicago

Harry and Elmer Balaban, of the Balaban circuit brothers, added a "sister" theatre to their famous Esquire theatre, Chicago, last week when the Surf had its formal opening. Formerly the old Dearborn theatre, the property has been transformed into a club-lounge type of house. With the formal opening the policy has been changed to a single feature program, by popular poll of patrons, with an hour of news, short subjects and cartoons known as "the Surf Digest."

The new facade is composed of incrusted English stone on the lower section and molded sandstone on the upper. The canopy designed for the front is made of canvas, due to the shortage of metal because of defense work. John Shaffer is manager of the house.

Stockholders of RKO to Meet

The first meeting of RKO stockholders in 10 years is scheduled to be held at Dover, Del., June 3d, it was announced this week.

The company's board of directors has set May 23d as the record date for the determination of stockholders entitled to vote at the meeting. The company's annual financial report for 1941, which will show a net profit for the company's operations for last year, will be mailed to stockholders with notice of the meeting about May 19th.

No meetings of RKO stockholders were held after 1933, when the company went into reorganization. Inasmuch as the company's present directors were named by the court to serve two year terms on the emergence from reorganization in 1940, no meeting of stockholders was held last year. It is reported that this year's meeting will be asked to elect a smaller number of directors than the present 13.

The new board is scheduled to meet shortly after the stockholders' meeting to elect new RKO officers.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and subsidiaries this week reported net profit of $335,286 for the 13 weeks ended April 4, 1942. Profit for the corresponding quarter last year was $236,679.

The RKO theatre company's profit before provision for depreciation and income taxes for the 1942 quarter was $747,696, compared with $492,374 last year. Depreciation charges for the quarter were $158,816, compared with $162,798. Provision for Federal incomes taxes was computed at a 40 per cent rate for the 1942 quarter and amounted to $253,594, compared with a 24 per cent rate amounting to $92,896 for 1941.

Prior to joining Ross Federal, Mr. Lund was for five years connected with Paramount Pictures.

Lumber Film Booked In San Francisco

After an absence from first-run houses since the old one-reel days, advertising films reappeared this week in four downtown San Francisco theatres. The ban was broken in the Fox, Warfield, Paramount and St. Francis thetheatres of the Fox-West Coast chain, to permit showing of "Trees and Homes," an ad subject in three reels produced by Weyerhauser Lumber Co., which sets credit in the film title. The showings are on orders from Fox-West Coast headquarters, which is booking the film into all its other outlets in northern California. It likewise is expected to be shown in the Evergreen circuit of the Pacific Northwest.

Showing of the film was approved recently by the Variety Club of the Los Angeles area, the proceeds from the advertiser, of $5 per 1,000 of theatre attendance, to go into the Variety Club for its welfare fund. Fox-West Coast had committed itself to show the film in northern California, and extension of bookings to the San Francisco area and Northwest is believed due to a desire to obtain as large a revenue from the advertiser as possible.

Managers in the San Francisco area have been given instructions to sign reports of each day's showings, indicating total number of passes and paid admissions that attended daily. The film is a "must" in the four San Francisco theatres, regardless of running time of the balance of the bill. No Variety Clubs have been organized as yet in San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

New Screen Aids Television for Theatres

Television images brilliant enough for long throw projection in motion picture theatres were forecast this week in a new television receiver screen patented by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, of New York. He is a consulting radio engineer and has figured in the development of many radio, television and sound motion picture developments.

Dr. Goldsmith's new television receiver is described in patent applications as a "thermal" screen to replace the fluorescent screens now used. It is said to reproduce an incandescent image so brilliant that it must be viewed directly with dark glasses.

Through a simple lens system the two to six inch image may be enlarged many times and projected 80 to 100 feet to a standard theatre screen, Dr. Goldsmith observes. The "thermal" screen may be used with the standard television receivers and transmission circuits.

The screen, the patent says, may be formed of fine tungsten wire net, or a sheet or strip of incandesment material. It is preheated by an electric element to the point where it just begins to glow. When the heated screen inside the cathode tube is scanned by an electron beam, the energy of the electron impact on the screen is sufficient to heat the wire momentarily to brilliant incandescence. The image being broadcast is reproduced with a brightness far greater than is possible with fluorescent screens.

Although the patent was not assigned it was reported likely that Radio Corporation of America, which cooperated in experimentation, and pioneered in large screen television in the United States last year, would encourage further development of the incandescent screen.

The gas which gives rotten eggs their characteristic odor, hydrogen sulfide, will increase the life of standard fluorescent television receiver tubes, according to two other patents issued by the U. S. Patent Office at Richmond, Va., this week. The patents, in the name of Chester J. Calbick, John B. Johnson and Howard W. Weinhart were assigned to Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., of New York.

San Francisco Fair Lost $9,106,489

San Francisco's two year exposition, 1939-40, showed a net deficit of $9,106,489, according to the final accounting. All was not lost, however, in the opinion of civic interests which backed the venture as the $8,000,000 land filled Treasure Island still remains, now occupied as an important Naval training base. In addition, tourists spent more than $65,000,000 in the bay area while attending the fair, and private backers who subscribed to the fair's opening the second year were paid back approximately 85 cents on the dollar.

Exhibitors Aid Red Cross Units In Canada

Executives of the film industry in Toronto have formed a special committee to assist the Canadian Red Cross in its drive for funds during May through theatre displays, trailers and newspaper advertising. Use is to be made of 150 prints of the campaign trailer, of which 40 will be booked into Ontario theatres.

The committee is headed by J. E. Lawson of the Canadian Picture Pioneers and the members include Col. John A. Cooper; Morris Stein, general manager of Famous Players; Oscar Hanson, president of the Canadian Picture Pioneers; T. J. Bragg of Odeon Theatres of Canada; H. T. Long, general manager, Associated Theatres Limited; J. Frank Meyers, Exhibitors Booking Association; N. L. Nathanson, president, General Theatres Investment Corporation, and J. J. Fitzgibbons, president, Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Burlesque Theatre Reopens in Montreal

Burlesque is back in Montreal. The Gayety theatre, which for almost a decade has been known as the Mayfair theatre and which has shown films only, reverts to its original position as Montreal's foremost burlesque house.

Since burlesque houses are banned in Montreal, the management of the Gayety has advertised its product as "vaudeville" with a guarantee of an abundance of genuine New York "flesh" providing a background.

Admission prices are wide in range, $1, 75¢, 50¢, 40¢, 22¢ being the evening price list, with matinee seats selling at 50¢, 25¢, 15¢. Film programs are being abandoned entirely.

Jack Nelson, manager of the Capitol theatre, North Bay, Ont., operated by Famous Players Canadian Corporation, has received the formal thanks of the Canadian Army, through the Northern Ontario Command, for his assistance and cooperation with a large nearby garrison.

The Capitol has entertained on an average of 1,000 soldiers per month at a free show since the opening of the camp 18 months ago and Mr. Nelson has sponsored the operation of club rooms for the troops as a community feature.

Bernard "Bernie" Beach has resigned his post as manager of the Fox theatre in Winnipeg to join the Royal Canadian Air Force. Mr. Bernard came to Winnipeg six years ago from Toronto and started as a doorman at the Metropolitan theatre. Shortly after he was moved to the Capitol, then became assistant manager of the Starland theatre. A year ago he was appointed manager of the Fox theatre. He is the first Winnipeg theatre manager to join the RCAF.

The theatres of Halifax, N. S., have been considerably affected by the action of the city council there in banning all merchandise vending machines, becoming the first Canadian community to bar such venders. Service men could not understand why they should be denied the opportunity to buy some candy, nuts or gum and complained to exhibitors. In order to explain just why the machines have been removed, cards have been on display in theatre lobbies.

The special committee to investigate Greater Winnipeg motion pictures, is asking leave to sit during recess, because it is unable to agree fro inthe evidence submitted on its recommendations to the Manitoba legislature.

SUGGESTS NEW FILM SLOGAN

"Movies for Morale" perhaps imprinted on a flag-striped and starred shield, may be used nationally by theatre men, on box offices, in advertising, in the mail. So believes Joe Hornstein, New York, distributor of theatre equipment. He has mailed the slogan, imprinted on small paper stickers, to "every person in office at Washington," and suggests to theatre men: "If we all got behind this 100 per cent, we could accomplish much for our industry in these trying times."

The committee was named as the result of a petition of the Better Movies Committee which complained about the type of pictures exhibited to children and asked that children under 14 be barred from attending theatres by the censor board as "adult."

Dave Rubin, of Ottawa, Ont., now an officer in the Canadian Navy and before joining up a theatre manager at Ottawa and Hamilton, Ont., is temporarily stationed at St. John, N. B.

The Essaness circuit last week announced three managerial changes. Richard Zeller has succeeded Harry Irons as manager of the Devon Theatre in Chicago. Howard Burns, formerly at the Southern Theatre in Oak Park, Ill., has been shifted to the Davies Theatre in Chicago. Harry Irons will manage the Southern.

Masterman Operating Service

R. H. Masterman, long with Universal in Charlotte, N. C., has purchased controlling interest in the Theatre Booking Service there and has assumed personal operation of the business. The service has been operated for a number of years by Hugh Sykes, who recently was called to the Navy.

Goldfinger Promoted

Sylvan S. Goldfinger, who has been manager of the Telenews theatre, Chicago, since its opening, has been made Midwest district manager of the Midwest Newsreel Theatres, Inc., with supervision over the Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland houses.

Nolan Branch Auditor

Daniel Nolan, RKO home office representative in New Haven, has been made auditor at the RKO New Haven branch office, succeeding Emmet Cashman, who has been assigned to the home office staff.

New York Condemns False Front Displays

Ordinarily approved exploitation boomeranged this week for New York's Rivoli Theatre, which announced Twentieth Century-Fox's Jean Gabin vehicle, "Moontide" with a three-story false front, atop its marquee.

New York City's Building Department served notice Friday that the theatre must demolish the "flimsy" construction within ten days or face a $500 fine. The theatre's lawyer responded with a show cause order, which may, in the Department's estimation, prolong the proceedings beyond the run of the picture. But the Department expects to exact that fine, its spokesman said Wednesday. He deplored the Rivoli's alleged "disregard" for wartime behavior.

The false front is allegedly combustible, fragile, and therefore a danger to pedestrians. The Building Department asserted other Broadway theatres, dousing uprights, dimming marquees, and refraining from glass and cardboard exploitation devices—have cooperated. They "resented" the Rivoli's stunt.

A Rivoli spokesman Wednesday denied receiving the demolition order from the Department.

Republic Plans Ice Skating Spectacle

Herbert J. Yates, executive chief of Republic Pictures, this week announced plans for an ice skating spectacle that will serve both as a motion picture feature and an auditorium attraction. The spectacle will be known as the Republic Ice Circus.

According to Mr. Yates, Republic will purchase a building, either in Hollywood or New York, to house a three rink attraction and presenting noted ice-skating acts. From the show's top ice-skating acts, Republic will produce, annually or semi-annually, a high budget motion picture built around the title, "Republic Ice Circus."

New Warner Appointments

New Warner appointments in the New Haven territory include that of Michael Regan, former police reporter of the New Haven Journal Courier, to the assistant managership of the Roger Sherman, New Haven, succeeding Murray Howard, who has been appointed manager of the new Warner Merritt, Bridgeport. Edward Lynch, former manager of the Capitol, Springfield is manager of the Warner, Bridgeport, succeeding Manny Kugel, resigned.

Midnight Show Policy

The Capitol, subsequent-run theatre of the Fanchon & Marco-St. Louis Amusement Company circuit, located in an area known as the St. Louis Bowery in the downtown section, has inaugurated midnight shows on Saturday. The last show breaks at 2:30 a.m.—about the same time as nearby burlesque shows. The street is usually congested with soldiers and civilians alike on Saturday night.

Set Country House Opening

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP: Jackie Gleason, Jack Durant—My doorman got plenty of sleep on this one. I wish that I had had a good band to play a snappy number while the few patrons I had marched out on this picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 4-5.—C. B. Carter, Co-Ed and Clemson Theatres, Brevard, N. C. Small town and tourist patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

TARZAN'S SECRET TREASURE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Drew exceptionally well and was liked by all. It's action pictures that the public wants this year. Running time, 81 minutes. Played April 17-18.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TWO-FACED WOMAN: Greta Garbo, Melvyn Douglas, Constance Bennett—If Garbo never makes another picture, it will be soon enough for the Star Theatre. Absolutely no draw, and those who did come were bored to tears. In our small town, her pictures just do not fill the bill. Running time, 94 minutes. Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TWO-FACED WOMAN: Greta Garbo, Melvyn Douglas—The popularity of Miss Garbo has reached such a low ebb here that it would be impossible to do any business with her pictures. The film was funny in spots. Running time, 94 minutes. Played April 19-20.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

WE WERE DANCING: Norma Shearer, Melvyn Douglas—This one is very poor. It's even too mushy for the women. Running time, 94 minutes. Played April 1-2.—K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

WOMAN OF THE YEAR: Spencer Tracy, Katharine Hepburn—Three very funny sequences with rather slow moments in between. The good parts are worth the price of admission. The audience in general liked it and the turnout was good enough. Running time, 114 minutes. Played May 1-2.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Paramount

BAHAMA PASSAGE: Madeleine Carroll, Stirling Hayden—Color and photography good, but Madeleine's tan make-up didn't take and made her look messy. Hayden just an amateur. FLY BY NIGHT: Nancy Kelly, Richard Carlson —Little program picture which got by on Pal Night. Running time, 74 minutes. Played April 28.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

OUTLAWS OF THE DESERT: William Boyd, Brad King, Andy Clyde—This was somewhat different from the usual run of "Cassidy" westerns and it is our opinion that his fans would not care for them on a regular diet. However, it was well made, the photography being exceptional. We still believe these westerns would be improved for the majority of audiences if there were a little more attention paid to the feminine roles. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 24-25.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SKYLARK: Claudette Colbert, Ray Milland, Brian Aherne—Very poor business. Didn't even make expenses. Played April 28-30.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

JOAN OF PARIS: Michele Morgan, Paul Henreid, Thomas Mitchell—Good picture which failed to draw because it had no star power. Not a small town show. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 26-27.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PLAYMATES: Kay Kyser, John Barrymore—Not much. This is not a Kyser picture. Two fair musical numbers and a few good laughs from Patsy Kelly. This picture proves what the plot tries to disprove, that Kyser and Barrymore do not mix. My house got more of a kick out of the sorry print I received on this one than they did the picture. Running time, 96 minutes. Played April 26-27.—C.B. Carter, Co-Ed and Clemson Theatres, Brevard, N. C. Small town and tourist patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

I WAKE UP SCREAMING: Betty Grable, Victor Mature—Business way off on this. Too sombre. The public is in no mood for such pictures. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 22-23.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

I WAKE UP SCREAMING: Betty Grable, Victor Mature—Betty, we agree with you that you should not step out of character as this certainly was not your type of picture. Not that you didn't do a good job, but your public just insists upon seeing more of you in good comedy and music. This picture was a miserable flop at our box office even though we considered it very fine. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LAST OF THE DUANES: George Montgomery, Lynne Roberts—A swell little western. Box office was O. K. Running time, 57 minutes. Played April 24-25.—K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

MOON OVER HER SHOULDER: Lynn Bari, John Sutton, Dan Dailey, Jr.—Decidedly a program picture which, if anyone can excuse themselves for doing, should be run as the lower half of a double bill. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 22-23.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

REMEMBER THE DAY: Claudette Colbert, John Payne—One of the finest pictures I've run in my theatre, but played to the poorest gross of the year. Tell me why? Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 3-4.—E. L. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

SWAMP WATER: Walter Brennan, Walter Huston, Dana Andrews—Not a bad picture that pleased the men. The women didn't care for it. The swamp scenes could have been much better and a little animal life would have helped them a lot. Average business. Played April 24-25.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

United Artists

NEW WINE: Ilona Massey, Alan Curtis, Binnie Barnes—If you can get them in, they will like it. I couldn't. Played April 28.—E. L. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

Universal

RIDE 'EM COWBOY: Abbott and Costello—The best one from these guys since "Buck Privates." Box office smiled every day. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 12-15.—K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

ROAD AGENT: Leo Carrillo, Andy Devine, Dick Foran—This is one of the best low budget westerns in circulation. Dick Foran was extra good in this one. Running time, 60 minutes. Played March 6-7.—K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

GAMBLING LADY (REISSUE): Barbara Stanwyck, Pat O'Brien, Joel McCrea—I did fair business on this reissue. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 29-30.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER, THE: Bette Davis, Ann Sheridan, Monty Woolley—More laughs than we have had in a long time. The crowd turned out in good shape and everyone went away happy. The humor is mostly in the very clever dialogue. If you have customers that cannot appreciate that type of entertainment, they may not like it. Enjoyment was unanimous here. It seems short as something is happening all the time. Running time, 112 minutes. . Played April 30.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Short Features

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ACRO-BATTY: Pete Smith Specialties—Another crazy Pete Smith reel on circus stunters on their days off. Very good. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

FLICKER MEMORIES: Pete Smith Specialty—Not so good. Has been done many times before. Just a filler. Pete can do much better than this.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

FRAIDY CAT: Technicolor Cartoons—A very good color cartoon featuring Tom and Jerry in plenty of laughs. Running time, 9 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

GREENIE, THE: Miniatures—Exceptional short giving an insight into conditions in the cities where recent immigrants live. Running time, 11 minutes. —Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GREENIE, THE: Miniatures—A good idea, but the dialogue is quite hard to get. It is a short story about a Polish boy trying to play with American boys in a baseball game. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

MELODIES, OLD AND NEW: Our Gang Comedies—The best Gang comedy for a long time. Many mentioned how well they like it. The kids were good in the dance numbers. It's okay.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

MINNESOTA, LAND OF PLENTY: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Beautiful travelog. Why wouldn't it be entertaining to have a series of these subjects on all the states of the Union? Running time, 10 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTER BOWLING: Sportlights—This was an excellent short, interesting to all types of audiences, even though they never experienced any part of this kind of sport. Running time, 10 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PERSONALITY PLUS: Sportlights—Very entertaining sport reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SUPERMAN IN THE BILLION DOLLAR LIMITED: Superman Color Cartoons—Poorest of this series so far. Even the kids didn't like this one. Just too extreme to get by. The other two we have shown got by pretty well.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

SUPERMAN IN THE MAGNETIC TELESCOPE: Superman Color Cartoons—Another good Superman cartoon. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

HUB OF THE WORLD: The World Today—Just a filler telling about present conditions in our national capital. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ARE WE IN THIS PICTURE?

You bet we are!
We're standing shoulder-to-shoulder with them!
16,000 strong, the theatres of America
Are lined up to sell War Bonds and Stamps!
When hell breaks loose—
And those young Americans face death
So that we may live,
Let's know deep down in our hearts
That we've done a job they'll be proud of!

THEATRE DRIVE FOR WAR BONDS AND STAMPS

Sponsored by the Theatre Division of the War Activities Committee of the Motion Picture Industry

Mr. Exhibitor: Remember the starting date, Saturday, May 30th. Did you get the Campaign Book for Theatre War Bond and Stamp action? If not, write to War Activities Committee, 1501 Broadway, immediately. The response has been literally soul-stirring. The motion picture theatres will fire the patriotism of the nation with their showmanship. Help strengthen our fighting machine with the pennies and dollars of democracy!

Institutional Advertising

When business is good ordinarily, the prudent theatre owner invests some of his profit in new equipment; today, if the new equipment were to be had it would be an excellent idea—profits are limited by income taxes. But no equipment is on the market.

What better use, then, can the theatre owner put his money to than an institutional and goodwill campaign? That is, of course, aside from the purchase of War Bonds, donations to charities and that sort of thing.

It is obvious that practically every theatre in the country is going to attract new audiences during the war period; war workers suddenly flush with more money than they ever had before, women who formerly spent all of their lives in their home and now suddenly are freed for war work and the consequent pursuit of enjoyment, and all those who are newly finding motion pictures an escape from the harsh realities of life will retain the habit when the war is over.

Welcome

It was a pleasure to greet the first of this Summer's vacationing showmen, Dick Feldman, manager of Schine's Paramount, Syracuse, N. Y.

Vacations will probably be slightly limited in some cases but we hope that we can help make New York sufficiently interesting to a visiting showman to warrant his surmounting today's travel difficulties.

As always, the Round Table stands ready to make hotel reservations or arrange meetings, and to provide a place where a visiting showman can receive telephone messages and mail. The "Welcome" mat is out. We're never too busy to greet a showman.

Rationing Limits Ballyhoos

Gasoline rationing in 17 eastern states brings in its wake many problems for the theatreman. First of all, his use of his own personal car, if he is fortunate enough to own one, is going to be rigidly curtailed. Unless it is absolutely essential, it would be inadvisable for the showman to make application for additional units of gasoline—some fellow townsmen may resent it.

Use of ballyhoo trucks should be definitely eliminated in those states where gasoline is rationed. Even if trucks are exempted, it would engender too much resentment on the part of private automobile owners if the theatre were allowed to use fuel for advertising while they, prospective theatre patrons, are limited to three gallons a week.

Showmen the world over have sufficient ingenuity to be able to overcome such a handicap. Ways to replace the ballyhoo truck are easily devised; horse-drawn vehicles can still be obtained; youths on bicycles can cover a lot of ground; and the pedestrian ballyhoo is still an old standby.

Examples

The Lucas & Jenkins Circuit's activities on behalf of the war effort, detailed in these pages last week, will inspire others. Most of what they have done can be done elsewhere. Like their "Go to Church" campaign, reproduced in the Round Table recently, such efforts demonstrate community consciousness and how this is impressed on the people.

The same showmanship and exploitation methods employed in selling an attraction were important parts of the circuit's effort to sell War Bonds and Stamps.

Elsewhere in this issue are details on what Nick Matsoukas has done to sell $2,250 worth of War Stamps in one week. Here, too, is a splendid example of what showmanship can be applied to the war effort.

Yeoman Service

A real traveling purveyor of showmanship visited the Round Table this week—Kenneth Prickett, exploitation director in charge of M-G-M's Show Builder. Ken has been on the "go" for six months, visiting large and small theatres in the Cincinnati territory. He has done yeoman work, spreading the gospel of showmanship into some towns which had never seen anything more extensive than a sign on the front of the theatre.

"I feel that I am representing not only M-G-M," he said, "but the entire industry. I talk before luncheon clubs, schools, businessmen and civic organizations, and I am convinced that I am making a lot of friends for the industry as a whole. One of the cardinal points in each talk is the great part the industry is playing in the war effort."

The Round Table agrees with him. Every showman has to sell the industry as a whole if he does the best job for himself.

How a Neighborhood Theatre Integrates Community War Work

by NICK MATSOUKAS
Manager, Skouras Tuxedo Theatre
Bronx, N. Y.

It was Monday evening, December 8, 1941, approximately 24 hours after the Pearl Harbor incident stirred the emotions of the American people. The Skouras Tuxedo Theatre, located at 3464 Jerome Ave. in the Bronx, New York, was featuring the Hollywood version of "Crime and Punishment."

I was standing in the lobby by the one-sheet display which boldly advertised "New Show Today." A lady approached me and demanded, "Suppose there is an air raid. Will I be safe?"

I explained to her that the Tuxedo Theatre, as well as any other theatre in New York City, was as safe a place to be during an air raid as any other. I pointed out to her that the theatre's construction was strong and durable. There were no windows to be splintered by bombs, and, like all licensed theatres, it was fireproof. Other customers asked the same question.

There are 100,000 people in my neighborhood who constitute my box office market. It is a mighty difficult task to attempt to reassure everyone individually of these facts. However, I became certain of one thing as the number of queries increased. The Tuxedo Theatre, like any other neighborhood theatre in America, should play a definite role in the lives of its customers.

Important to War Effort

In the opinion of this writer, the neighborhood theatre, if utilized properly, can become a most important unit in the nation's outlets for the dissemination of information about the war effort.

The average theatre operator is conscious of the important role his neighborhood theatre plays in the life of his community. With the country at war, his consciousness of the role of the neighborhood theatre in the war effort of the nation has now crystallized and taken a definite form.

The theatre manager knows this fact. It is entrenched deep in his heart. "If we lose the war," he says, "there will be no more theatres for us to manage."

The theatre manager has gone to work. With the traditional ingenuity that has characterized his past in elevating the pioneer nickelodeon into the modern movie palace, he has evolved a plan where his business establishment plays a definite role in the war effort of the nation.

It is a practical, simple, three point plan, calling for an all-out aid of the neighborhood theatre in our efforts to stay free as a people. This is the plan:

1—Sunday morning Civilian Defense Rallies are being staged in New York for the purpose of providing widespread community mass education on Civilian Defense.

2—With showmanship, the neighborhood theatre has undertaken to sell Defense Stamps and Bonds.

3—The neighborhood theatre has become an effective channel in the dissemination of constructive information, in the community, preparing the individual citizen for a more effective role in the prosecution of activities relating to "Home Front Preparedness" and others connected with the "War Front."

Here's Matsoukas' booth in action. In one week $2,250 in War Stamps were sold

On Sunday, May 24th, Greater New York inaugurates on a city-wide basis the Sunday Morning Civilian Defense Rallies, whose patriotic and educationally informative program will reach 250,000 comfortably seated people.

The committee in charge of this plan, now known as the "Skouras Plan for Community Mass Education," is composed of representatives of:

1—The Greater New York Civilian Defense Volunteer Office.

2—The Police Department, Civilian Defense Services.

3—Representative executives of the motion picture circuits, and independents in Greater New York.

This committee has planned a comprehensive six-month program. This program is so organized that any changes in the propaganda effort of the nation's war policy can be adopted at a moment's notice.

At the New York City Sunday Morning Civilian Defense Community Rallies, the theatre patron views, free of charge, a 45-minute motion picture program consisting of British Air Raid Films, depicting the manner by which the British people overcame the air-raid crisis. In addition, Victory films as they come from the Hollywood studios are presented. For the rest of the program the audience hears speakers from the Greater New York Civilian Defense Office; the Police Department, and the Fire Department. Following the meeting, outside the theatre, a demonstration of how to extinguish an incendiary bomb is staged by the city authorities.

The staging of these rallies brings about a close-knit relationship between the theatre operators and such organizations as the Women's Volunteer Service, the American Legion, the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, Veterans of Foreign Wars and many others who join to make each Sunday rally a colorful affair.

The membership of the local branches of these bodies constitute, in the main, the very backbone of any community. With their frequent participation, the theatre manager begins to note that his theatre is evolving into something more vital than just a mere business enterprise. His theatre is fast becoming the real community center of the neighborhood. With this plan the theatre's brightly lighted facade spells not only entertainment, but real community service to the people who support it at the box office.

Those people who do not frequent the theatre, eventually will. If we, as managers, expect to be served by our neighbors, in the sense of box-office patronage, we must in turn serve them in their community needs. This axiom is true now more than ever before, because the needs of our respective neighborhoods are greater.

The marshalling of the community forces into one coordinated unit of activity has created for the Tuxedo Theatre an avenue whereby the sale of War Stamps has jumped from a mere $250 a week to the sober figure of $1,500 per week. The first routine plan for the sale of War Stamps in the theatre lobby and at the box office, which brought in $250 weekly, was unsatisfactory. To increase the weekly sale of War Stamps, the staff of the theatre built a booth which was placed directly opposite the box office on the sidewalk, under the marquee.

Dedicated as "Freedom Booth"

On May 8th the War Stamp booth was dedicated as the "Freedom Booth" by the War Savings Staff of the American Women's Voluntary Services. Two street shows a day on Saturdays and Sundays with entertainers atop and near the booth helped boost the sales. In the week preceding the opening of these shows the booth grossed a record sale of $2,250.60 in war stamps and it is expected that this total will be surpassed.

The Skouras circuit is now constructing 65 similar booths to be put into operation in all their theatres.

Total war is changing our lives. But it is also changing the routine of the neighborhood theatre. Today, more than ever, the neighborhood theatre is fast becoming the new "Town Hall" of America. The neighborhood theatre being a more democratic institution than any other creation of modern Americans, offers opportunity to all the people to take advantage of its physical conveniences. Bear this in mind: 10,471,842 people can be seated at one time, and from their seats they can discuss whatever is necessary for their democratic destiny.

What other social institution in the United States can answer such a call?

"Blind Date" Party Arranged For "My Gal Sal" Opening

The advance campaign for the opening of "My Gal Sal" at the New York Roxy featured three old-fashioned barber shop quartettes, which toured the city in open barouches singing hit tunes from the picture as crowds assembled.

A special preview, service men's dance and "blind date" party was arranged by Homer Harman, publicity director right before opening. 500 service men and their "blind dates" were brought to the theatre and paired up by means of numbered tickets. The guests witnessed a broadcast from the lobby of the Frank Crummit-Julia Sanderson radio show "Battle of the Sexes" and were then shown the special preview of the picture, which was followed by a dance on the stage.

Music was heavily plugged in music window tieups and spot announcements were used in addition to a 15-minute transcription over Station WNEW. The front, which according to Harman is the most elaborate ever constructed at the theatre, combined moving neon figures and colored still displays along entire side walls.

Radio Contest Aids "Song of the Islands"

Through the cooperation of Station WATR, Ed Fitzpatrick at Loew's Poli, in Waterbury, Conn., ahead of "Song of the Island" landed a special 15-minute "Down Memory Lane" contest two days before opening with listeners invited to name former Grable song hits from previous musicals. In addition Station WBRY's daily morning organ broadcast plugged song hits for a week in advance, while records were played over the theatre's non-sync at the opening and close of each show.

Music stores came through with window displays, playing songs from the picture over their loudspeaker hookup and Fitz further promoted a juke box for lobby use ten days in advance of opening.

For "Gone With the Wind," Fitz stressed contests, one of which offered cash prizes to those submitting best letters to the daily on "Why I Want to See 'G.W.T.W.'" In addition, coloring and word-building contests were landed in papers, each of which came through with art work on Vivian Leigh. Through iteup with baker, miniature cakes bearing tiny cutouts of Scarlett and Rhett were promoted and sent to editors of papers. Each of the confections bore candles signifying the second anniversary engagement of the film.

Serialization Helps Sell "Kings Row" for Harwell

Reported as a first-timer for the planting of a serial in his local daily, which was achieved ahead of "Kings Row" at the Ohio, in Mansfield, Ohio, by Bill Harwell, resulted in two front-page stories before the serial broke. Teaser trailers were used at least two months ahead, while double faced cards reading "Have you read 'Kings Row'" were put out around town. Two copies of the book were donated to the public library, which brought stills and book displays. Window cards and store displays, plus a walking book bally, completed the campaign.

MOVIES FOR HEALTH & HAPPINESS
ATTEND REGULARLY
SMALLEY'S DOLGEVILLE Theatre

Prepared for distribution with change and enclosing in the theatre's mailing list is the set of our institutionals gotten out by Bill Johnson at Smalley's, in Dolgeville, N. Y. Each of the four has been blown up to 30 by 60 size for weekly lobby display and the card with the corresponding copy is handed out during the same seven days. It is Johnson's assumption that at the end of a week one idea will be fairly well entrenched, after which he starts pounding home on a new one. By the time all four ideas are driven into the minds of his public, the Round Tabler expects that a higher appreciation of the importance that movies play in the lives of his patrons will have had its proper effect.

Gooch Honors Local Schoolboy Patrol

Holding a special showing of his regular program for members of the local A.A.A. schoolboy patrol, Francis Gooch, at the Houlton, in Houlton, Maine, arranged with the state police to have a member of the force present to deliver a talk on safety to the other members of the audience and to tell of the great job the boys are doing. In addition, Gooch had special Certificates of Merit printed, which a member of the Rotary Club presented to the captain of each patrol in recognition of his work.

Geisman Has Press Breakfast; Dance Contest Staged In San Francisco; Legion Presents City With Flag

The local American Legion Post presented an American flag to the city from the stage of the Strand, St. Charles, Mo., as part of the promotion for "The Bugle Sounds" put over by Vince Helling. As a street ballyhoo he used a life-size compo board tank outside the theatre. The "tank" carried a record player and p. a. system.

Radio contests were among the highlights of the "Courtship of Andy Hardy" campaigns put over by Loewmen Joe Longo of Boston and Dan Terrell of Washington, D. C. Longo planted one asking listeners to name 10 of the world's most famous courtships and another asking them to name all the Hardy Family pictures. Terrell's included one to find the most artistically constructed and decorated jaloppy and another to find the best boy or girl "jive" talker.

An autographed copy of the novel, "The Vanishing Virginian," was awarded the patrons buying the largest amount of War Stamps as a feature of the campaign put over by J. W. Pickett, Rivoli, Hastings, Neb. He also staged a "Virginia Reel Dance Contest" in the auditorium of the local radio station.

A press breakfast for newspaper critics and feature writers, radio interviews, appearances at several meetings of the San Francisco unit of the American Women's Volunteer Service, and many window displays were set by Manager Cliff Geisman for Tommy Dorsey's recent one-week date at the Golden Gate theatre in that city. All music stores in the city provided window exhibits, one of the firms plugging the band's recordings, and theatre date, in page one ad in the Daily Chronicle.

As a teaser ahead of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" at the Warner Majestic, in Johnstown, Pa., Walter Hall dressed his doorman up in tux, mustache and beard to represent Monty Wooley and had title letters printed on his shirt front. Pressbook covers were used as window cards and placed in popular restaurants, five and dimes, etc., while tieup with furniture store brought dining room window display with appropriate tieup copy.

"Reward" teaser window cards were gotten out by Roy Metcalfe ahead of "Belle Starr" at the Rapids, in Rock Rapids, Ia. For his street bally, Roy had several girls carry overnight bags with copy: "I'm here to collect the ten thousand dollar reward for Sam and Belle Starr. I was tipped off that Belle Starr will be at the Rapids Theatre," etc., etc.

For "How Green Was My Valley," Bill Harwell at the Ohio, in Mansfield, Ohio, arranged with the Senior High School A Capella Choir, composed of 100 mixed voices, to sing on his stage as a prologue opening night. The chorus sang at evening performances also, using three of the Welsh songs from the picture.

ELDER DISTRIBUTES "GWTW" RULER

Teaser miniature glossy rulers were used by Bill Elder as throwaways ahead of "Gone With the Wind" at Loew's, in Indianapolis, Ind. Distributed at schools, office buildings and other spots, the rulers carried copy—"Not one inch. Not one thrill has been cut from", etc., followed by title, cast and playdates.

Teaser street stencils leading direct to his theatre with copy "V equals Victory, VV equals ?" were used by Ed May ahead of "Vanishing Virginian" at the Schine Russell Theatre, in Maysville, Ky. Through the cooperation of the local D. A. R. movie chairman, May promoted an essay contest in the upper grades of local public schools. Special card displays made by students from pressbook clippings were placed on all school bulletin boards and announcements were made at assemblies two weeks in advance of the opening.

As his teaser street ballyhoo ahead of "Shanghai Gesture" at the Omaha, in Omaha, Neb., Ted Emerson used two girls and a man dressed in Chinese mandarin costumes, each carrying signs printed in Chinese reading: "Shanghai Gesture. Forbidden Romance." In addition, the entire staff was dressed in Chinese attire during the run of the picture.

To sell his "April Shower of Hits" at the Paramount, in North Adams, Mass., Francis J. Faille erected a lobby display which featured blowup of raindrops on each of which was planted the titles and a scene still of coming attractions.

Leo Trainor, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Allentown, Pa., has installed a voice-recording machine in the lobby for patrons to record messages on unbreakable records and send them to the boys in Army camps.

In connection with the drive to collect reading material for service men, Waxmann's Hollywood, Cinema and Astor theatres, in Atlantic City, have placed receptacles in the lobbies to receive books and other reading matter.

Photo layouts and stories for five days were carried by the Call-Bulletin San Francisco to ballyhoo a Saturday morning party at the Orpheum theatre for 3,000 members of its Junior Victory Army. Use of the house was donated by owner, Joseph Blumenfeld, to enable the kiddies to witness the anti-Nazi film, "The Invaders", and the Office of Civilian Defense picture, "How to Fight Fire Bombs."

Reported as proving highly successful for Mel Jolley at the Columbia, in St. Thomas, Ont., was the tieup effected with Quarter Oats Company for "Dive Bomber." Through the courtesy of the Oats Company, Mel distributed toy airplane training cockpits to all kids who attended Saturday matinee and presented three boxtops from one of their products. In addition, company paid for printing and distribution of 2,000 heralds, which were distributed to kids at school, etc. Mention was also made of the offer in a herald distributed by local grocery chain.

Concentrating on the woman angle in "Remember the Day," Harry D. Stearn at Schine's Manring, Middlesboro, Ky., had a window tieup with a local photographer in which he placed ancient and old photographs around an easel with copy, "Remember the Day when photographs looked like this?" All school teachers were contacted by personal phone calls plugging the teacher slant in the picture and window cards were landed in beauty shops, grocers and any stores frequented by women.

Since the front page of the magazine section of the Vancouver Sun carried a scene still from "Joe Smith, American," Leslie Campbell at the Strand, in Trail, B. C., received permission from local news agent to stamp his theatre and playdates on 500 of the papers. The little stunt, says Les, did him no harm at the boxoffice.

A Marine Corps dance contest plugging the run of "To the Shores of Tripoli" was arranged by Manager Herman Kersken of the Fox theatre in San Francisco. The event was staged in the city's new Hospitality House, with five sailors acting as judges. All newspapers cooperated in giving press breaks to the affair, and winners and their girls received tickets to the show.

Contacting the layout man for local radio guide, Pete Egan at the Palace, in Calgary, Alberta, Can., succeeded in landing a two column cut of Fibber McGee and Molly as they appeared in his current attraction "Look Who's Laughing." Spot announcements were also used after the Johnson Wax and Chase and Sanborn programs. Inviting sports editors from both his daily newspapers to witness the fight pictures playing with "Look Who's Laughing," Egan landed further breaks in those columns, which he would not otherwise have reached.

For his colorful lobby display on "Sons of Fury" at the Colonial, in Junction City, Kans., J. A. Sanders had his artist air brush two 40 by 60's of Tyrone Power and Gene Tierney. In the center was a pan with copy: "Robust adventure of two worlds and many women." For "Keep 'Em Flying," Sanders used cutout title letters 17 inches each in height, which were stretched across his lobby. At each end was a standee with stills from the picture and at top airbrush paintings of Abbott and Costello.

"Gen. MacArthur Night", "Marine Corps Week", Safety Defense Shows Stress War Showmanship

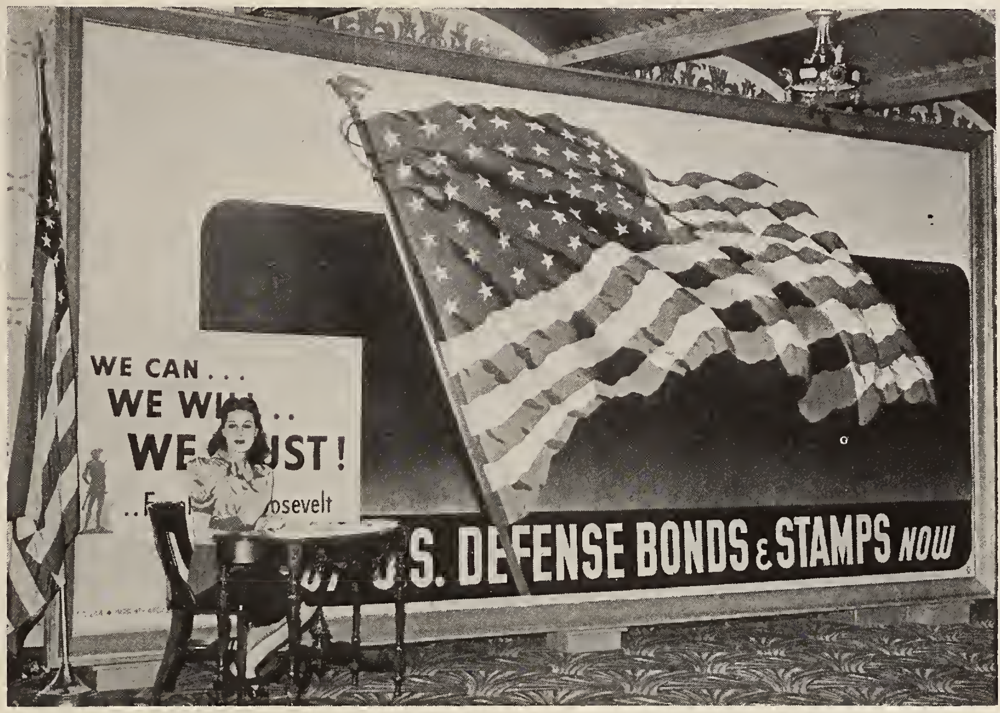
"General MacArthur Night," held at the Paramount Theatre, Staten Island, by Elihu Glass, manager, was a highly successful affair and one which netted the theatre a great deal of favorable publicity.

Exhorting his patrons to "Remember Bataan," Glass tied up "General MacArthur Night" with his showing of "The Bugle Sounds." For some time in advance, Glass had a box in the lobby in which patrons deposited a penny each to defray the cost of a telegram sent to General MacArthur at his Australian headquarters. The telegram was read on the night of his special show.

Another feature that made that evening memorable was the appearance of Major Russell Havighorst, executive officer at Fort Wadsworth, on the stage of the theatre. Glass assures us that Major Havighorst's personal appearances are few and far between and that his talk on the stage that evening was regarded as quite a coup by the Staten Island newspapers.

Free photos of General MacArthur were given to every patron on the night of this special showing. A uniformed bugle corps gave a concert in front of the house and later on the stage of the theatre.

As a part of his program Glass assembled shots from several newsreels which showed scenes of General MacArthur.



Bill McCurdy, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Portland, Ore., started his War Bond Drive in advance. Above—the twenty-four sheet board in the lobby, with June Ruvall, house cashier, at her post ready to sell War Bonds and Stamps.

Attention on War Workers

In line with the Government's effort to stimulate civilian activities by making the defense worker conscious that he is the "Soldier Behind the Lines," Ed J. Fisher, director of publicity and advertising for Loew's Cleveland theatres, in cooperation with one of the local dailies has arranged a promotion to focus attention to the war workers. Each week 10 defense workers are chosen at random from one of the plants, they and their families are the guests of Loew's theatres to see whatever attraction appeals to them. In addition, each worker receives a telegram from the star of the motion picture currently playing at Loew's State congratulating him or her on his war efforts. The cooperating paper comes through each week with stories and art work.

"U. S. Marine Corps Week"

Reported by ad head Les Kaufman of the Fanchon & Marco Theatres, in St. Louis, was the all-out campaign ahead of "Tripoli" which brought the proclamation by Mayor Becker of "U. S. Marine Corps Week." To usher in the event, a special Marine Airplane flight was staged over the theatre on opening day as a salute to the first day of the Marine Week, while on opening night there was a Marine induction on the stage consisting of 40 men, and radio interviews given the lot.

Marine collar insignias were sent out to all newspaper and radio personnel in advance, making them Honorary Marines during the week. Members of the Alpha Chi Omega Sorority at Washington University formed a "Maureen Corps" for the purpose of keeping the lads supplied with mail. Further newspaper break was garnered when the girls made a surprise invasion of the Marine Corps Recruiting Station in the Federal Building and presented the presiding officer with a packet of letters for marines stationed at the San Diego base.

Safety Defense Shows

Of no small moment was the recent four week local Safety Defense Shows staged by Nat Silver at the M. & P. Strand Theatre, in Lowell, Mass., in cooperation with the local police department, fire department, public safety office and the Accident Prevention Bureau. Starting at nine o'clock on Saturday mornings, the program ran for an hour and a half and included newsreels and safety pictures. Talks were delivered to the children on how to act and what would be expected of them during air raids and other emergency demonstrations. The local newspaper came through with front-page stories and pictures of the youngsters, together with excerpts from the talks delivered.

Sworn In on Stage

Arranging for a detachment of U. S. Marines to come up from Albany headed by Major McKinless, Lou Hart ahead of "Tripoli" at the Schine Glove, in Gloversville, had three local boys sworn in from his theatre stage. The showing was dedicated to all the boys from the county who had already enlisted in the Marines, while the recruiting drive was timed with the opening campaign and brought a record enlistment the first week.

Hart's exploitation for the date featured a gala parade with the American Legion Band marching with banners from the Armory with a Guard of Honor. The band performed on stage, playing the Marine Hymn. For his lobby display, Lou set up a recruiting booth appropriately decorated with Marine material and officers in constant attendance. Numerous windows were secured, one of which adjacent to the theatre was decorated with battle flags and a plaque which listed the names of local boys who had joined the Marines.

A-Board Easels on Street

There's a law against advertising signs standing in the street, but Edgar Goth, advertising and publicity director of the Fabian Staten Island Theatres, got A-Board easels in front of several prominent stores by using "Join the Marines" on posters advertising "To the Shores of Tripoli."

He also tied up with a large laundry to carry posters on the sides a week in advance and currently.

The four color cartoon herald was imprinted on the back by a local haberdasher and circulated in large quantity.

Special Booth for Bonds

A special booth for the sale of Defense Stamps was set up in the lobby of the Skouras Hempstead Theatre, in Hempstead, L. I., by Edwin E. Enke, the base of which carried one of the Government's Defense posters. Local Boy Scouts aided in the sales of stamps by acting as barkers, bringing in the customers.

LINDA JANE on Saturday, May 2, to Mr. and Mrs. Bud Kornblite. The proud father manages the Capitol Theatre, in Waverly, N. Y.

PHIL LAUFER

is the publicity director at Loew's Criterion Theatre, in the metropolitan district of New York City. He joined Vitagraph in 1918 and was with this outfit for five years, after which time he was in various theatres and other businesses. In 1932 Phil went to Warner Bros. home office and after a couple of years moved to their Strand Theatre. Four years later, upon the opening of the Criterion Theatre by Moss and Charnas, Phil secured a position at this house and remained at this spot when Loew's bought the property.

HARRY ROSE

is an active Round Tabler and has been mentioned often in our Quigley Awards Competitions. He is the manager of the Loew-Poli Globe Theatre in Bridgeport, Conn. When a youngster Harry played in vaudeville acts and continued in this work with his wife when he married. Later on he announced amateur contests and produced added attractions for B. S. Moss. In 1928 Harry became an assistant manager at the Lincoln Theatre in Trenton, N. J. and then did similar work for Loews at the State Theatre in Syracuse, N. Y.

F. A. ZEHRINGER

is the manager of Warner's Stanley Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J. He started his career at the bottom of the ladder, when he obtained an usher's job at the Mastbaum in Philadelphia and then became chief of service at the State, in that locale. He moved to Atlantic City and started again as usher for the Warner Theatre and then was given an assistant managership at the Colonial. After several years Zehringer was made manager at the Stanley, Virginia and Warner Theatres, his last communication coming from the Stanley.

JOHNNY MATIS

started in the picture business in 1926, by ushering for the Saxe Theatres in Milwaukee, Wis. He worked his way west, from one theatre to another, landing in the Hillstreet house in Los Angeles. For a short period Johnny quit this industry but returned to work at the Warner Theatre in Milwaukee. A step-up brought him to an assistant manager's job and then he was promoted to skipper the Juneau, Milwaukee and Egyptian houses in Milwaukee and the Strand in Manitowoc, Wis. Leaving Warners Johnny joined the Fox Wisconsin Theatres circuit as manager of their Wausau house in Wausau, Wis.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON

obtained his first job doing theatre work at the Daylight in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, in 1928. In 1932 he moved to the Capitol and two years later he was at the Empire. He broke up his theatrical career when he quit to enter the restaurant business but very soon after returned to manage the Roxy Theatre in Wilkie, Saskatchewan.

PERRY F. REAVIS, JR.

was an apprentice at the Comet Theatre in Angier, N. C. and then became a relief operator there. Shortly thereafter he obtained the operator's job at the newly-opened Piquant house in the same vicinity. A transfer took Perry to Pittsboro to operate and manage a theatre and the next move gave him the same duties in Lillington. At present we find Perry at the Beaufort in Beaufort, N. C., where he is doing a fine job.

EDWARD C. McGOVERN

started in showbusiness as an usher in 1927 at the Capitol Theatre, Scranton, Pa. He became chief usher at the Riviera, same sector, when it opened the following year, and then was promoted to assistant manager. The next situation, in like capacity, was at the Comerford Scranton and in 1937 Ed secured the managerial reins at the Riviera Theatre. Another transfer brought him to manage the Rialto house in Scranton, where he is now employed.

OBITUARIES

Joe Weber Dies; Fields' Partner

Joseph M. (Joe) Weber of Weber and Fields, whose burlesque antics appealed to theatre audiences before the turn of the century, died Sunday in Los Angeles. He was 74. His lifelong partner, Lew Fields, died last July.

In the half century and more during which Joe Weber was a figure in the theatre he and his partner bridged an epoch in American entertainment and created a new mode of entertainment. The burlesques which they offered were the forerunners of the revues which swiftly became so popular, and Weber and Fields themselves set so fast a pace in the amusement world that they finally were swamped by it, and because of the tremendous costs which their methods had brought they were obliged to yield the field to those who had followed in their footsteps.

Mr. Weber was born in 1867 on New York's lower East Side. His career began when he was eight years old. He and Lew Fields, a neighborhood boy, formed a singing and dancing team and entertained their elders on the sidewalks of New York. They separated in 1904 and became partners again in 1912 but their success never again approached their early days when at the Weber and Fields Music Hall in New York they presented most of the foremost performers of the day, including David Warfield, Lillian Russell, Marie Dressler, De Wolf Hopper, Fay Templeton, Frankie Bailey and many others.

Denmark Manager Dies

Harold Frost, Paramount branch manager in Copenhagen, Denmark, until the liquidation of American film interests there by the Nazis, died on Monday, April 20th, John Hicks, vice-president in charge of Paramount foreign distribution, revealed Wednesday. Word of Mr. Frost's death was received through Carl York, Paramount general manager at Stockholm.

John J. Hammerly

John J. Hammerly, 59, projectionist at the Northio Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, died at his home there April 26th. His widow, two sons and five daughters survive.

George Curtis

George B. Curtis, projectionist at the Capitol theatre, North Abington, Mass., died in the projection booth at the theatre May 2d of a heart attack.

William Fellerman

William Fellerman, father of Max Fellerman, RKO Theatres executive, died at his home in Brooklyn May 6th.

McNamee, Radio Figure, Dead

Graham McNamee, radio announcer, broadcast reporter and newsreel and short subject commentator for Universal, died suddenly last Saturday of an embolism of the brain, in St. Luke's Hospital, New York. Mr. McNamee, who was 53, had entered the hospital two weeks before when he was stricken by a fever that could not be reduced.

During his 19-year career as a radio announcer for the National Broadcasting Company, Mr. McNamee covered the outstanding sport events, the political conventions and many of the most important news stories of the period.

Mr. McNamee was born in Washington, D. C., July 10, 1888. His first job was a clerk for the Rock Island Railroad at St. Paul. Then he became a salesman for Armour and Company, meanwhile continuing the study of music which he had begun as a youngster. He made his debut as a baritone in Aeolian Hall in New York in 1920 and sang on the concert stage in most of the large cities of the country and also in many churches in New York. In 1923 when he was without engagements and out of funds, he wandered into the offices of Station WEAF in New York, seeking a job. He was engaged as an announcer-singer and soon became an outstanding personality in his field.

Besides his radio and newsreel work, Mr. McNamee appeared with Ed Wynn in "Fire Chief," for RKO Radio in 1933, was narrator for "World in Revolt," Mentone Production in 1934, and played the role of radio announcer in the Myrna Loy-Cary Grant "Wings in the Dark" for Paramount in 1935.

Funeral services were held Tuesday in New York. Interment was in Columbus, Ohio.

Robert Petrie

Robert I. Petrie, vice-president and general manager of the Crosley Corporation, manufacturing division, in Cincinnati, died in Good Samaritan Hospital May 8th after a month's illness. His widow and three sons survive.

Arthur Hornblow, Sr., Dramatist, Dies

Arthur Hornblow, Sr., 77, author, playwright, dramatic critic and editor, and father of Arthur Hornblow, Jr., motion picture producer, died May 6th at his apartment at the Berkeley-Carteret Hotel in Asbury Park, New Jersey.

Mr. Hornblow was editor of The Theatre Magazine, no longer published, from 1901 through 1926, when he resigned to become dean of the John Murray Anderson-Robert Milton School of the Theatre, a position he held for two years. He was the drama critic for The Theatre Magazine and for years conducted the column "Mr. Hornblow Goes to the Play." Mr. Hornblow's "A History of the Theatre in America," an authoritative work in two volumes, was published in 1919. He wrote several other books.

This Above All

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

A Love Story

"This Above All" is one of the truly great motion pictures to come out of this war. Like Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms" of World War I, this screen adaptation of Eric Knight's best-selling novel is a moving and compelling love story of two people caught in the maelström of a war which has brought them together in spite of conflicting backgrounds and beliefs and yet remains a barrier to their happiness.

Their differences are never actually resolved but their love shines brightly regardless and the ending, in the tragic surroundings of a London hospital, doesn't quite seem the tragedy it would in a world not at war. There is solace, too, for men and women everywhere, who have felt, will feel, the conflicting emotions that the boy and girl in "This Above All" feel.

And, while the setting is England, after Dunkerque, and the social philosophy deals in matter peculiarly British, it is a story for Americans, too.

The principals are Joan Fontaine and Tyrone Power. Collectively their performances are sensitive and true. Individually Miss Fontaine rises to the heights once again in a magnificent portrayal of a girl born to the aristocracy who enlists in a woman's military organization.

There she meets the boy. An idealist, he had enlisted on the first day of war, distinguished himself on the battlefield and had been in the Dunkerque evacuation. He had been granted sick leave and had overstayed it because he no longer wanted to fight for an England he believed to be decadent, an England that he felt condoned the slums and perpetuated the aristocracy.

The girl and boy, attracted to each other from the start, spend her furlough at the shore. It is when a soldier-pal (Thomas Mitchell) comes to spend a day with them that she learns of his past. She tries to convince him that England is worth fighting for but only succeeds in sending him away. He is finally posted as a deserter and becomes a hunted fugitive.

After a harrowing episode in which he is hunted by the home guard as a spy, the deserter takes refuge in a parsonage. Leaving there, bolstered by a talk with the parson, a disabled ex-soldier, he phones the girl to meet him in London where they will be married, after which he plans to give himself up. The girl arrives at Charing Cross, but meanwhile the deserter has been apprehended and although he obtains a few hours leave, he never reaches the station. While saving a mother and her child from a bombing, he is injured by falling debris.

The girl finds him in the hospital. They are married. He is on the borderline between life and death and that is how the picture ends. There are no heroics and whatever else the picture offers, it is primarily a love story, beautifully told with sensitivity and sincerity.

Darryl F. Zanuck produced the picture and Anatole Litvak directed from a screen play by R. C. Sherriff.

Seen at a showing for the press in a projection room in New York. The audience gave the picture undivided attention and the usual fidgeting was absent. The picture drew applause at its close.—PAUL C. MOONEY, JR.

Mrs. Miniver

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

War and People

A best selling novel provided the characters and setting in England at war, for this picture. Cinema artistry of the higher sort transfers "Miss Miniver" to the screen in an absorbing human, and warm story of a family and the effects of war on their lives. It has that ideal combination of emotion and story, skilfully presented, which would seem to mark it as the first honest and triumphant screen presentation of what the United Nations fight for.

It has the combination of star names, production talent, and appeal to all groups and ages for which the showman prays. And these lines should mean a word of mouth enthusiasm such as greeted "Goodby Mr. Chips."

Sidney Franklin, the producer, who portrayed mood and intangibles with such success in "Mr. Chips," tells the story of Mrs. Miniver, her husband Clem and their family in a skillfully compounded chain of vignettes of day to day life in a little English village. He weaves the humor, romance, tragedy and beauty of these particular lives into their proper, focal place in the larger tapestry of England fighting for its existence, and theirs.

Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon, as the Minivers, are a romantic couple and wise parents. They pace skillful characterizations by the entire cast.

The picture opens as they tell each other of extravagances for a new hat and a car. Their home, typically middle class, is in a little village ruled by Lady Beldon. The first crisis arises when the station master enters his rose, the "Mrs. Miniver," in competition against her ladyship's, which always wins, at the flower show.

This crisis soon gives place to the larger one of war. The Minivers' son, Vin, well played by a newcomer, Richard Ney, joins the RAF. His love for Lady Beldon's granddaughter, Teresa Wright, ripens into betrothal on the eve of Dunkerque. But the son is called away to fight in the air, and his father to pilot his launch across the channel to aid the evacuation.

For Mrs. Miniver, at home, the war is near also, in anxiety, and literally when she captures a Nazi flyer. Husband and son return from France, as the air battle for Britain begins. It is portrayed, without spectacle, in the shuddering garden bomb shelter as the Minivers, soothing their smallest children. hear their home demolished, and worry for their son.

Vin lives to marry Carol Beldon, however, and find happiness with her for a brief two weeks. Then the image shatters as the air raiders return to blast the village during Lady Beldon's flower show. It is Carol that dies. Not the young flyer.

To the villagers in memorial service the Vicar answers the "Why?" posed by the pain of war. The old and young and the wife must die, he tells his parishoners, because it is a war "of all the people" to be fought not only on battlefields but in cities, factories, homes "and in the heart of every man and woman and child who loves freedom."

William Wyler's direction draws the proper moods from every scene, highlighting his story with the precise touch of pathos or humor needed to make it live. Screenplay, casting, photography, and music each contribute their utmost to the perfected whole.

A projection room audience, principally reviewers, gave rapt attention, chuckling at the comic relief offered by Master Christopher Severn and were frequently moved to audible approval of the skilled presentation of mood and story.—JOHN STUART, JR.

Let's Get Tough

(Monogram)

The Kids Trap the Japs

Followers of the East Side Kids are given opportunity here to watch the young roughnecks with hearts of gold trap and wrap up a band of Japs plus a brace of Nazis by a series of deductions and devices scaled down to a simplicity which the juniors present can understand even if it bores the adults.

Billing of this number in the series produced by Sam Katzman and Jack Dietz is given a tilt by the presence of Tom Brown and Robert Armstrong in the cast.

The story opens with the kids venting their patriotism upon a store keeper who is immediately murdered under the circumstances which prompt them to investigate. A couple of dashes of hari kari enliven proceedings between that point and a knockabout finale in which the kids whip a houseful of armed Jap conspirators before the police can arrive. It's all on the incredible side but reasonably fast and brightened at intervals by dialogue nifties.

Wallace Fox directed from a story and screenplay by Harvey Gates, with Barney A. Sarecky as associate producer.

Remember Pearl Harbor

(Republic)

Melodrama in the Philippines

Under this timely title the House of Republic has constructed a melodrama which generates tension that holds suspense and interest for just about all types of theatregoers. By an adroit combining of governmentally released footage of actual events with action material filmed for the picture a maximum of realism is attained in battle sequences which pack a load of thrill and permit of no letdown until the last shot has been fired.

Reviews received too late for this Section are printed in the regular news pages of the Herald and are reprinted the following week in Product Digest for their reference value.

The setting is an Army post in the Philippines and the picture opens in mid-November of last year and continues over December 7th and the attack on Pearl Harbor. Incidents in which humor and a suggestion of impending conflict are to the fore serve to introduce three soldiers, a girl, an inn-keeper and an alleged Dutch scientist who, later on, are to have the principal parts in the melodramatic events which include an attempted invasion by Japanese troops, fighting on land, bombings from enemy planes and finally the sinking of a Japanese ship by an American flying a Japanese plane.

The screenplay by Malcolm Stuart Boylan and Isabel Dawn keeps out of the routine of espionage melodramas and maintains suspense steadily.

Albert J. Cohen, producer, and Joseph Santley, director, rate praise for a high order of entertainment enterprise.

Performances are generally satisfactory, those of Donald M. Barry, Sig Ruman and Rhys Williams standing out.

Previewed at Republic studio for a tradepress audience which expressed agreement on the merits of the production as both entertainment and attraction.—W. R. W.

Escape from Hong Kong

(Universal)

Topical Melodrama

At bottom a melodrama in pattern with others featuring Leo Carrillo, Andy Devine and associates, this attraction stands apart from its kind because the scene is Hong Kong just before and during the attack on Pearl Harbor and on the city of the title. This integration with events of reality prospers the picture as entertainment and gives it exploitation advantages.

The screenplay by Roy Chanslor places Carrillo, Devine and Don Terry in Hong Kong as a vaudeville trio featuring crack marksmanship and throws them into an espionage plot in which Marjorie Lord is seen as a British agent pretending to be a Nazi agent cooperating also with the Japanese. Mystery, suspense, surprise and danger keep interest alert throughout incidents intervening between start of the film and the trio's rescue of the heroine and their escape by motor boat as the Jap attack on Hong Kong gets into full swing.

Marshall Grant as associate producer and William Nigh as director make the most of their opportunities and extract a lot of value from their budget.

Previewed at Universal studio to a small press audience.—W. R. W.

Native Land

(Frontier Films)

Documentary

Beginning with a series of disconnected incidents, this film attempts a brief history of the labor movement in the United States from 1935 on. The writers, producers and directors are passionately devoted to their subject and apparently have strong feelings about the labor movement.

Employers are pictured as all black and labor as all white with no possible middle ground. The early scenes are more devoted to incidents of death or suicide which seem to have nothing to do with the labor movement as a whole or any part of the picture.

The best part of the film is the narration by Paul Robeson. Photographically, the picture is somewhat under par. On the other hand certain qualities are manifested which would indicate critical approval and resultant success in the so-called "arty theatres," as opposed to the general motion picture house. The average audience, even if strongly pro-labor, would find little in the picture of interest. Leo Hurwitz and Paul Strand directed.

Distribution arrangements for the film have not yet been completed.

Previewed at the World Theatre in New York for an audience of critics, including a number from labor papers as well as a sprinkling of labor leaders, all of whom received the picture in absolute silence up to the end when they applauded enthusiastically.—BOB WILE.

Release date, May 11, 1942. Running time, 80 minutes. Adult audience classification.

INDIA IN CRISIS (RKO)

March of Time (23,110)

The problems and mystery of India are so vast that the March of Time has decided to devote two separate releases to the presentation of the various factors involved, of which "India in Crisis" is the current and first. The population is largely divided into three different groups, the Moslems, the Hindus and the Untouchables, and the March of Time discusses the political aspirations of each group, beginning with the great spiritual leader of his party, Mahatma Gandhi. The three groups are opposed to each other, but all apparently oppose the British. The reasons for India's lack of progress are shown, namely, the antiquated religious taboos, and the wealthy princes who want to maintain their own status quo and the status quo of the people. The March of Time touches on Britain's early abuses of India, and then goes into detail to show what Britain has done to develop the vast potential of India. That Sir Stafford Cripps' mission to India failed, the March of Time gives the impression, is India's fault. With this tremendous country one of the burning issues of the day, this short will give audiences an insight into the nature and character of this strange land. The current March of Time may not be quite as exciting as other issues, but it is informative.—IRENE SMOLEN.

RISING TIDE

FORECASTS and records of movements for the motion picture industry in Britain, set down in his correspondence from London by Mr. Aubrey Flanagan, strew the page with such terms as "rationalization", which seems to blend into "nationalization" and to lead up to declarations by Labour for "a form of state guardianship".

There is much that goes on in Britain that is akin to movements that show beginnings here.

Over there the technicians' union, which includes directors, too, criticizes and would have a hand alike in the conduct of the industry and in the relations between the government and the industry, including concerns of propaganda. The principal pressure is toward that "guardianship", which, it would seem, would be designed to be extraordinarily complete.

The reader of Mr. Flanagan's account inevitably will reflect that relations between the preponderant producers and distributors of films here, and the Department of Justice in matters of trade practices, has long since given the government a powerful hand in the American industry.

THE news of this week includes vivid exemplification of the processes now in application. The Schine circuit has accepted an order to divest itself of sixteen theatres in thirteen communities as the price of a two-year postponement of a Federal anti-trust action. This comes at the end of three years of legal gestures.

This has perhaps a larger significance in its inferential application to the movement for divestment, or separation of exhibition from distribution, which was once so important a factor in the anti-trust suit against the major corporations. It indicates that the issue, which was not reflected in the Consent Decree, is merely dormant, not dead.

Inter-relations between screen and government are growing apace. It is an inescapable consequence, too, of the necessities and causes of the nation at war, so much concerned with what the screen can do, and the state of mind of the great audience of the entertainment theatre.

Every aspect of the motion picture is a subject of interest to some branch of the Federal government now, with the latest development by which the Library of Congress and Mr. Archibald MacLeish will be having reports upon the nature and qualities of pictures in the current flow. Inescapably this is a study of cultural and social content, parelleling, one would assume, equivalent studies of the literature of the printed page.

The erudite Mr. MacLeish will, of course, remember that Andrew Fletcher of Saltoun, English songwriter, 1655-1692, once wrote a letter to the Marquis of Montrose in which he remarked: "If a man were permitted to make all the ballads, he need not care who should make the laws of the nation."

OPA IS ASKING

A SEARCHING examination and record of the internal affairs of every business institution in the nation has been launched by the Office of Price Administration, with a set of inquiry forms received in the motion picture industry this week. From now on, not later than one month after the end of each quarter, report must be made that tells all: balance sheet, profit and loss, analysis in detail of all changes in operation, costs, executive salaries, names of stockholders engaged in management if they hold over ten per cent of the corporation's stock, wage structure, production and distribution, and all manner of expenditures for whatever purpose.

This line of inquiry goes beyond those of the Department of Internal Revenue in its most searching moods, and beyond anything that the NRA contemplated or asked for.

The amount of special accounting and bookkeeping involved will be making this line of quarterly reports a decided labour and problem for most concerns and an especially difficult one for many lesser enterprises.

Uncle Sam is getting positively intimate, not to say chummy.

FILMS and FIRES

A CONSIDERABLE satisfaction should be enjoyed by the motion picture industry in the attention of the convention of the National Fire Protection Association International in Atlantic City to the magnificent fire record of the films. In 1941 there was one fire in a film exchange, loss $200. From January 1, 1926, to December 31, 1941, there were fourteen exchange fires with losses totaling only $4,594.

The motion picture, all of its working life, has enjoyed the ill repute of being most damnably inflammable, or explosive, or both.

That began with, and took most of its impetus from, the Charity Bazaar fire in Paris, May 4, 1897, now forty-five years ago and when, incidentally, the National Fire Protection Association was just a year old. The Charity Bazaar fire killed some 180 persons, among them about a hundred and thirty of the nobility and notables of France. The cinema got the credit for it, although in fact the film had indeed little to do with it. The illumination device on the projector used an ether-burning lamp which the operator tried to fill while in operation. There was a great service at Notre Dame and a furore in the press. A report of the Municipal Council of Paris on May 10 recorded that "the nature of the cinematograph was little known" and urged that it be submitted to police regulation. It was—the world over; and from then on.

Motion picture film is not explosive. It does contain enough oxygen to burn without exposure to the air if it reaches kindling temperature. It is not as dangerous as its reputation, but it started under a publicity curse. Happily, today's regulations and practices seem adequate for safety.

JUST in case some script writer should be looking for a device for introducing action at a lull in the story, it would be your editor's pleasure to suggest a sequence devoted to the pursuit of a flying squirrel with a badminton racquet during a blackout in a country house. Important properties indicated by experience would be a beamed ceiling, assorted bookcases and a shelf devoted to decanters and glassware.

War Cameras Roll

CAMERAS are already rolling on the first of the 26 war shorts which Hollywood will produce for the U. S. Government from themes suggested by Lowell Mellett, Coordinator of Government Films. Five studios have accepted assignments to date for subjects ranging from nutrition to geopolitics and the opposing concepts of Nazism and American democracy.

The pictures, it has been definitely agreed, will be sold to exhibitors. It has been said, too, that both Mr. Mellett and the industry feel them to be so important that prices will be reduced. But there has been no word as yet from industry conferences, or Washington, as to just what the prices will be, or who is to get the profits, if any.

Several companies have indicated that they are dropping regular shorts series to make room on their 1942-43 sales program for the Government pictures. Their spokesmen have privately expressed the opinion that the war pictures should be sold as part of their regular program to compensate for lost screen time, and revenue. They argue that payment insures preferred playing time.

Exhibitor groups, however, have offered to underwrite production expenses and have proposed that if there are any profits they should be devoted to a charitable or war cause. Suggestions have been heard also that the rentals from the special assignment pictures be used to finance the War Activities Committee, or even the United Motion Picture Industry.

H. M. Richey, exhibitor relations contact for MGM offered one of the first specific clues to what industry policy would be in selling the shorts. On Thursday he told a Federation of Women's Clubs convention in Atlantic City that the pictures "not only will present these vital messages but will assist in financing some worthwhile war activity." He said profits would go to "some war or emergency charity."

The specific assignments of five companies are as follows:

Columbia: What Can I Do, Americans All, Workers and Solders, Alien Persecution (with Warners), Military Tactics (with Warners), Weapons From Waste.

MGM: Divide and Conquer, Why Are We Fighting, Unsung Heroes, Nutrition, History of a Rumor, Building the Army, Letters From the Boys, Strategy, Geopolitics.

20*th Century-Fox*: Thunderbird Field, Silent Enemy, Hoarding.

Universal: Listen to England, The Menace of the Rising Sun, The British Took It.

Warner Brothers: A Ship Is Born (color), Alien Persecution (with Columbia), March on America (color), Military Tactics (color, with Columbia), This Is Your Enemy.

Paramount and RKO: Subjects to be allocated later.

No Bond Bookkeeping

THEATRES selling war bonds and stamps, beginning May 30th, in the motion picture industry's huge and continuing cooperation with the Treasury Department, will not be forced to collect, handle, or forward large amounts of money, nor to keep intricate records.

Si Fabian, director of the industry's campaign, said Tuesday in New York, that theatres would receive bond pledge blanks. Filled in by purchasers, these will be given by the exhibitor to the local bank, postmaster, or county chairman of the Treasury's War Savings Staff. The exhibitor will keep a stub, his record of the sale. His theatre will receive full credit. The job of collecting the money and delivering the bonds will be the Treasury's.

Australia Pays

REPRESENTATIONS by distributors to the Australian and New Zealand Governments, intimating that forwarding of frozen revenue would be "deeply appreciated," and remindful of the aid extended those countries by the U. S., appeared this week to be taking effect. Universal received remittances. More to other companies will follow.

Last week, Governments of the two countries authorized the eight major American film distributors to withdraw approximately $2,500,000 of the frozen money, immediately, and without prejudicing subsequent authorized withdrawals to come after a pending monetary agreement. That agreement will succeed the one expired February 28th.

The remitttance monies, under last week's permission are approximately 75 per cent of the amount the companies were allowed to withdraw last year. Of last year's total of $3,300,000, some $2,300,000 came from Australia, and $950,000 from New Zealand.

Warner to Washington

WASHINGTON reported Wednesday that Lieutenant Colonel Jack L. Warner, vice president in charge of production at the Warner studios, and Hal B. Wallis, executive producer, were being invited to the War Department next week as "head men" in its motion picture section. According to reports, high Army officials have decided to "let Hollywood do a real production job" on official warfilms.

It was further reported that Colonel Warner, with Mr. Wallis, as his aide de camp, would give special attention to picturing the activities of the Army Air Corps.

At the studio on Wednesday Lieutenant Colonel Warner's office was referring inquiries to Colonel Arthur Ennis, chief of Air Force press relations. Colonel Warner was scheduled to leave for Washington over the week-end. however.

Air Corps officials Wednesday admitted their motion picture division was being organized but said it would not be completed for some time. It is believed that Colonel Warner will be in charge and that Mr. Wallis is to receive a commission which will enable him to take an "important position." It is said there is in contemplation the production of important war program pictures in cooperation with the motion picture industry.

President's Orders

AN OFFICIAL release to the press, Tuesday, from the New York Office of the (Rockefeller-Whitney) Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, via Charles E. McCarthy, advisor on public relations, read as follows:

"Motion pictures taken in an unexplored region of Southern Mexico showing the life and activities of a lost race of aborigines have been purchased from Dana Lamb, explorer, by the Motion Picture Division of the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and will soon be distributed for non-theatrical use throughout the country.

"Mr. and Mrs. Lamb spent a year and a half in the jungles of Southern Mexico and their pictures, which are in color, were first brought to the attention of the Coordinator's Office by President Roosevelt after a screening at the White House."

Taxing Charity

SCREEN and radio actors and actresses who donate their services directly to charitable causes will be relieved of the necessity of reporting the value of such services for income tax purposes, under a new ruling of the U. S. Treasury, but where the performance is given for a person or organization who is to turn the proceeds over to charity the value of the entertainer's services constitutes income.

The Treasury explained that under this ruling, an entertainer need not include in gross income the proceeds from a performance requested by a charitable organization actually sponsoring an event, the income from which would belong solely to the organization.

However, when the services of the entertainer are rendered to a person other than a charitable organization and that person makes payment for the entertainer's services to the charitable organization, the amount so paid must be included in the return of the former and subject to Federal tax.

'Inadvertent Error'

CHANGING its judicial mind for the first time, the Appeal Board of the Motion Picture Arbitration System, in New York, on Tuesday, reopened a case in which it had already handed down a decision. The board served notice to the distributors and other participants that it would reconsider its award in the Dipson Theatre Corporation's clearance complaint for the Bailey theatre, Buffalo. They gave the distributors until Monday, May 25th, to file new briefs, and the complainant until June 1st to reply.

In its original ruling, the 24th Appeal award, the board cut the clearance of the Shea circuit's Kensington over the Bailey to one day and granted the Bailey the right to play not later than 37 days after first run Buffalo. They also dismissed Paramount and Loew's as affiliated distributors. Michael Catalano, the arbitrator, had cut the Kensington's clearance to three days.

"To correct inadvertent errors" the Appeal Board is permitted to reopen a case by Section XVIII of the decree's rules of arbitration. It is the only specific permission in the decree for such reopening. It was reported that the Board had invoked the clause in answer to a petiton by the intervenor.

News Duplications

DUPLICATION of pictures in the semi-weekly releases of the five newsreels is sharply increasing. An executive of one of the larger newsreel circuits said this week that houses specializing in news pictures or making up their own newsreels were finding it increasingly difficult to round out a full program without repeating.

As many as six out of eight subjects in some of the news releases are identical in each reel, he said. The necessity of pooling overseas war material, and an increasing demand by the Government for special newsreel attention to certain topics has been responsible for the duplication.

Newsreel houses report that they are making increased use of short subjects to fill out their programs. One group, the Newsreels Distributors, affiliated with the Embassy circuit in New York and Tele-News Theatres is producing more special material and providing longer clips of special commentaries by H. V. Kaltenborn and Tex McCrary.

Public interest in newsreels is still at a new high when there is good war footage available, one theatre man said. But, he added, the theatres could use much more official news footage. War coverage, he said, could be better and wider without hurting morale or revealing secrets. He also expressed the opinion that still picture services were getting subjects which should also be released to the newsreels.

'The Moon Is Down'

FOUR weeks ago, Twentieth Century-Fox announced the purchase of the film rights to John Steinbeck's Broadway play, "The Moon Is Down," for what the company described as the highest outright-purchase price in play-buying history. The figure was generally reported around $300,000.

"The Moon Is Down," playing at the Martin Beck Theatre, New York, will close on Saturday, after a run of 55 performances.

Few plays have arrived on Broadway under as exciting circumstances and critical controversy as did the Steinbeck story of a Norwegian town invaded by the Nazis. The opening split drama critics into two camps which argued over the merits of "The Moon Is Down" both as a play and as propaganda.

Leonard Lyons, in the New York Post, on Tuesday, reported that John Steinbeck was going into the U. S. Army Air Corps to write a movie for the Corps.

End Axis Claques

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

AXIS claques and demonstrators are no longer a problem to Mexican motion picture exhibitors. Since the sinking of a Mexican tanker by a Nazi submarine on April 1st national feeling below the Rio Grande has been so stirred that the entire nation is now solidly back of the Government in its whole hearted cooperation with the democracies. This is definitely evident in the motion picture theatres.

It has silenced the small but bothersome group of Nazi sympathizers which made a business of demonstrating in theatres, with whistles and boos, against anything on the screen about the Allies. Newsreels, particularly those about the British, previously evoked frequent demonstrations. General MacArthur was greeted with groans when he appeared on the screen of a Mexico City theatre not long before the ship sinking.

There is now no nuisance from the enemy in any theatre in the capital.

Stage Grosses

NEW YORK CITY not only houses the country's largest and best film theatres, and hence is considered the "key" of the film world. It also is the leader and home of the stage—which there serves from 8,000,000 to 12,000,000 persons a year. Those persons pay almost $20,000,000 yearly to legitimate boxoffices. The figures were supplied to the New York Herald Tribune last week by the League of New York Theatres, which also remarked that London was superseded by New York "long ago" as the center of dramatic arts.

LADY HOLLYWOOD GETS HER RATIONING CARD

Studio Construction Cuts Thin Labor Ranks; Stars Ride Buses with Extras

HOLLYWOOD BUREAU

War's impact was felt severely this week by every studio worker, from star and executive to laborer, and by every company in allied industry businesses.

Item of major importance to some of the crafts was the spectre of unemployment in the industry.

Items of major importance to studios and allied businesses were the curtailment of vital materials by the War Production Board order limiting new set materials to $5,000 for each picture, and the order of the Government transportation director drastically curtailing the use of tires.

And, from all indications, studio space and manpower are about to be mobilized for war production activities.

Plasterers, laborers, painters, prop makers, carpenters and other workers actively engaged in the construction of motion picture sets face a drastic curtailment of employment, because of the Governmental order limiting the cost of new materials to $5,000 for each film.

Shift to Other Industries Difficult

According to Ben Martinez, business representative of the Ornamental Plasterers Local 755, most of his men are now seeking employment in other than the film industry because of the sudden elimination of much of their work. Whether other industries in Southern California can absorb the men is a question which has not yet been determined, for vital materials for new construction are restricted there, too.

The use of cotton and muslin backing for sets, instead of lumber, the necessity for reducing the size of the scenery, have taken away the desire of carpenters to remain in the industry where they can hope for little steady work. Many of the members of Carpenters Local 946 had gone into defense industries before December 7th, and those who remained had fairly steady employment.

The "new material" shortage will affect their work to a great extent.

Substitute Prop Materials Sought

Prop makers have been spending much of their time seeking substitutes for rubber and other materials formerly used extensively in the making of various items necessary for production. Little success has been reported, at least publicly, in the "ersatz" lines. As a result, the dressing of sets may be reduced to a minimum.

Every one of the crafts working on the physical preparations of motion pictures for screening will be directly affected by the curtailment orders. It is estimated that 75 percent of the cost of a set goes for labor and 25 percent for materials.

TECHNICIANS WANTED BY SIGNAL CORPS

A New York subcommittee of the Personnel Committee of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has been formed to assist in the procurement of qualified motion picture technical personnel for enlistment in Army Signal Corps units, it was announced this week by Colonel Nathan Levinson, chairman, and Major S. J. Briskin, vice-chairman of the Committee.

Membership of the eastern subcommittee includes Alan Freedman, chairman; Joseph Coffman, Franklin Lagrand, Joseph Spray and Gordon S. Mitchell. Headquarters are in Mr. Freedman's office at 850 Tenth Avenue, New York.

The order of War Transportation Director Joseph Eastman cutting down the mileage to be consumed by all rubber borne vehicles struck directly at the members of Studio Transportation Drivers Local 399 whose members have a closed shop agreement with all studios and most of the allied businesses.

Conferences are under way to devise a means of pooling all studios' transportation facilities and with fewer vehicles in operation, there will be less employment for the drivers.

At the conferences being carried on by a committee headed by William S. Holman, RKO studiomanager, the local is suggesting that each truck used carry two drivers, in order to take up the slack.

Truckers Arrange Return Loads

As now worked out, studio trucks will not be allowed to make a delivery and return to the studio empty. It must go to a central depot and be assigned to a load, be it vegetables, groceries or what not.

Under the studio pooling arrangements, a half laden Paramount truck, for instance, would have to stop at Columbia, RKO or another studio to make up a full load before going to its Valley destination. On returning, if empty, it would be assigned to stop at Republic, Universal, or Warners to make up a load for Hollywood.

For instance, should the studio haul some horses in trucks up to San Francisco, the vehicles would have to haul back produce or other goods if they originally were scheduled to return empty.

However, legal difficulties may arise under that plan, for California has a Common Carrier Law which protects regularly established freighting lines. Studio attorneys are studying this legislation with a view toward erasing any conflict between practices imposed on them by the Governmental transportation board and those of the state law.

The plan is not yet in effect, but the independent messenger services which number some of the studios as their clients have already notified them that deliveries and pickups are being drastically curtailed.

In effect, however, is the limitation of the number of vehicles assigned to location troupes. Extras, crew members and stars are being placed in buses along with the director, instead of observing the "star" system of limousine transportation formerly in vogue.

The studio having the greatest location problem will be 20th Century-Fox, which had planned to have at least seven location troupes going in the next two months, some of them out-of-state.

Available Studio Space Surveyed

The War Production Board has made a survey of all studio space which might be available for housing war factories and is undertaking a survey of technical manpower throughout Hollywood to set up the proper machinery for making the film industry a part of the assembly line for Victory.

Last week, Watt Moreland, southern California manager for the WPB's contract distribution branch, said that idle stages in Hollywood would be made ready soon for small war manufacturers. He has compiled a list of vacant loft and potential plant space.

However, a checkup of the General Service, Fine Arts and Talisman studios, largest of the rental lots, revealed that no rental or lease contracts have been negotiated thus far.

Questionnaires asking details of past technical experience are being mailed to from 150 to 300 studio workers, with a view toward lining up potential manpower to supervise the small plants. There has been no public announcement of the nature of their future work.

Payroll Deduction Plan Reorganized

Meanwhile, the War Savings Committee of the Hollywood studios, headed by Henry Ginsberg, pushed its drive to enlist every worker in the film studios and allied businesses in a voluntary ten percent payroll allotment to buy Victory Bonds.

Last week, it was announced at a meeting of union and guild representatives, presided over by Frank Carothers, chairman of the union executive subcommittee of the savings group, that a system had been set up so that casual workers who at times might work in as many as five studios a week would have their deductions at each studio sent to a central clearing house, established at 20th Century-Fox.

Sugar rationing, which hit every American consumer, likewise hit the studios, but in a very different way. "Break-a-way" glass, used in shots requiring smashing of windows and the like, used to be made of clear, hard candy. It won't be in the future.

UNITY PLAN FINALLY REACHES CAPITAL; CONCILIATION SET

First Phase of Committee's Aims Completed; Decree Revision by June 1 Seen

The motion picture industry's Unity Plan for selling in blocks-of-12, and otherwise, has been placed in the hands of the Department of Justice, Washington, for approval and substitution of the selling requirements of the Department's consent decree about which exhibitors have complained loudly and long since it went into effect last September 1st.

The United Motion Picture Industry completed successfully the first phase of its joint exhibitor-distributor drive for all industry unity on Friday. The Committee of the Whole, announced "with pleasure" that agreement had been reached on the five point trade practices program, following a two day meeting at New York.

A new sales formula to take the place of the blocks-of-five plan now provided for in the Consent Decree was the key accomplishment of six months of UMPI deliberations. Of almost equal importance was the working out of a conciliation procedure, to supplement the consent decree arbitration, with machinery for the settlement of both territorial and individual complaints.

All five of the distributors who signed the consent decree reaffirmed their policy against the forcing of short subjects. The unity committee agreed also to a continuing study of arbitration with a view to recommending in procedure and scope to the Department of Justice for possible inclusion in the consent decree.

A committee of exhibitors on Saturday went to Washington to show the plan to Robert Wright, special assistant to the Attorney General and chief of the motion picture section of the Department of Justice. The group, composed of Colonel H. A. Cole, former national president of Allied; Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, and Robert White, president of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, held what was described as a purely informal discussion of the features of the plan and told Mr. Wright that it had exhibitor approval.

Legal Form to Be Worked Out

Attorneys for the five consenting companies, MGM, Paramount, Warners, 20th Century-Fox and RKO meanwhile labored to put the proposed amendment to the consent decree into proper legal phraseology before formally submitting it to the Government. A member of the drafting committee at midweek expressed hope that it could be submitted to the Government in time for presentation by June 1st to Henry W. Goddard, New York federal district judge who signed the consent decree. It was scheduled for presentation to the subcommittee on Thursday.

The conciliation plan was subscribed to by three of the consenting distributors, MGM, 20th Century-Fox and RKO. Paramount and Warner Brothers dissented.

Paramount said it would study the possibility of furthering relief through arbitration.

Warner Brothers indicated willingness to conciliate directly with its customers and invited exhibitors who believed themselves entitled to relief to submit any and all complaints to the home office. Warners, an UMPI statement said, "assures all such exhibitors that their matters will be given prompt attention and that they will receive whatever relief their claim merits."

It was pointed out that the failure of

Extent, Procedure of Plan

Following is an outline of the conciliation procedure agreed upon by the UMPI committee of the Whole for the voluntary settlement of territorial and individual disputes:

I. Territorial Disagreements

"Territorial disagreements of a substantial nature may be referred to the United Motion Picture Industry by anyone within the industry who may be affected thereby. Thereupon the chairman of the UMPI General Committee, in collaboration with the chairman of the Committee on Intra-Industry Relations, shall appoint from the industry at large, but outside the territory in question, a Fact Finding Committee, to consist of:

"(a) An independent exhibitor or a representative of independent exhibitors.

"(b) A distributor representative.

"(c) A circuit theatre operator or a representative of circuit theatre operators.

"Such committee, as soon as possible after being appointed, shall visit the territory involved and make a full investigation of all the material facts and circumstances causing and surrounding the disagreement. The committee, if in agreement, shall report the facts fully to the General Committee together with such recommendations as it shall see fit to make. If the committee cannot agree on a joint report, then each member shall make such report and recommendations as he may deem appropriate. The General Committee shall thereupon discuss the findings and recommendations and attempt to find a solution, if one be necessary.

"The purpose of the plan is to constitute the United Motion Picture Industry a forum for the airing of important territorial disagreements in the hope that a practical solution may be found that will be acceptable to all interests.

"In keeping with the fundamental principle of UMPI, there will be no vote by which either the distributors or the exhibitors will be bound to relinquish any rights or follow any prescribed course of action. Moral persuasion shall be the only sanction for the solutions recommended by UMPI."

II. Individual Complaints

"All acknowledged the value to the industry of the arbitration system set up under the Consent Decree. It was felt, however, that certain problems not now subject to arbitration could be equitably adjusted by conciliation; also, that certain controversies included in the Consent Decree might be adjusted more speedily and less expensively by conciliation. Accordingly, it was agreed that a conciliation machinery should be set up to supplement but not to supplant the existing system or arbitration.

"It is understood, and is a condition of the plan, that the invoking of conciliation by an exhibitor or distributor shall be without prejudice to any rights they may have under the decree.

"The most difficult problem involved in this feature of the plan is that of distinguishing between the meritorious cases that are deserving of the time and attention of those who will carry on the work, and the trivial cases and imaginary grievances growing out of ordinary bargaining over the terms and conditions under which pictures are licensed.

"In order that no just grievance, no situation that is working a genuine hardship, may be ignored, it was thought best to forego any hampering restrictions on the kind of cases that may be handled. The Committee believes that it can be left to the good sense of those cooperating in the work, and to experience, to evolve a sort of rule of reason which will serve to discourage attempts to use the system as a substitute for sound bargaining and at the same time insure that no exhibitor or distributor who is really suffering from conditions not chargeable to his own improvidence or neglect shall fail of consideration.

III. Procedure

"(1) The person (exhibitor or distributor) desiring conciliation of a problem shall first discuss the matter with the other party involved (exhibitor or branch manager) and attempt to reconcile their differences.

"(2) Should they fail to reach an agreement then the problem should be submitted by the exhibitor or distributor to a representative of the regional exhibitor association, or to any other individual conciliator he may choose.

"(3) If a solution cannot then be found, the matter should be submitted by the exhibitor or distributor and the conciliator to the distributor's New York office.

"(4) Still failing of solution, the problem should be submitted to the secretary of UMPI.

"(5) If a solution still has not been found, then the problem should be submitted to and placed on the agenda of the General Committee of UMPI for review at its next meeting.

"It is believed that very few cases would ever reach the General Committee; that most of them would be adjusted or abandoned during some of the four preceding steps. At no stage of the proceedings shall a decision be made or a solution be ordered to vote. In this connection, it was felt that the discussion which would take place during the proceedings, the weight of opinion of the persons participating therein, and the spirit of conciliation and good feeling engendered would be sufficient to bring about an amicable adjustment of all problems which may be presented.

"To facilitate the solution of individual problems and to relieve the conciliation machinery of as much work as possible, each distributing company will inform its branch offices of its purpose to support this plan and will authorize its sales force to co-operate with the exhibitor associations as far as possible in the adjustment of all problems."

UNITY DRAFTS CONCILIATION

Paramount and Warners to subscribe directly to the conciliation machinery set up by UMPI did not affect their participation in the sales plan, or other trade practice agreements. The conciliation machinery will be completely voluntary and it is not intended to be incorporated in the decree.

Although all major distributors are members of the UMPI movement the report noted that the Big Five consent decree signers were principally concerned with the new sales plan. United Artists and Universal have not participated in the unity discussions in view of pending Government anti-trust action against them. Columbia, the third member of the Little Three, was represented by an observer at sessions, but did not directly participate.

The U. S. Government is sympathetic with the problems of exhibitors under the consent decree and will do everything possible to relieve "unhappy" situations caused by trade practices now in effect. Edward L. Kuykendall, MPTOA president and a member of the exhibitors' committee which conferred at Washington on Saturday with Robert L. Wright, special assistant to the Attorney General and head of the Department of Justice motion picture unit, said in Chicago Tuesday that the Government was very much aware of exhibitor problems.

Permanent Organization, Operating Budget Sought

The next move on the UMPI agenda, it was reported, will be the establishment of a permanent organization and operating budget. This will permit action on other proposals originally advanced at Chicago, including institutional advertising and promotion, and the maintenance of conciliation machinery.

A legal committee composed of Abram F. Myers, chairman, Felix Jenkins and Howard Levinson is now drafting a proper corporate structure to constitute the United Motion Picture Industry as a legal nonprofit corporation.

The Finance Committee will meet in the near future to draft a plan for the Committee of the Whole to provide for the continuing support of the unity movement.

To meet expenses to date, including railroad and hotel fares of committee delegates, each consenting distributor has advanced $2,400, the report said. Each national exhibitor organization paid $1,000 and the unaffiliated theatre associations a total of $700.

Called Supplement To Arbitration

The conciliation plan is described as a supplement and preliminary to arbitration complaints under the provision of the decree. It is called a forum "for the airing of disagreements in the hope that a practical solution may be found that will be acceptable to all interests."

There will be no vote on disputes, in keeping with the original principles of UMPI, by which either distributors or exhibitors might be bound to relinquish any rights or follow any prescribed course of action. "Moral persuasion shall be the only sanction for the solutions recommended by the United Motion Picture Industry," the report said.

THE SALES PLAN

The selling formula agreed upon by the UMPI committee offers exhibitors, in essence, the following:

(1) Blocks of 12, sold quarterly. Five pictures trade shown, seven identified.

(2) Cancellation of two of the seven pictures for exhibitors paying up to $100, of one for those paying $100 to $200 average rental.

(3) Identification of all pictures by trade show, or synopsis, star or story.

(4) A new cancellation formula will be negotiated for any company whose total production is reduced by 20 per cent or more.

(5) Allocation of prices at the time of booking or notice of availability.

(6) Special features and roadshows continue as defined in the consent decree.

(7) Cancelled features are not to be included in future blocks.

(8) Westerns may be sold six at a time, unscreened, but identified by star.

The complete text of the plan appeared on page 13 of the April 4th MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

A joint exhibitor-distributor committee will investigate the facts in a complaint and report either a unanimous or separate recommendation to the general UMPI committee. The whole body will then discuss the findings and seek a solution acceptable to all parties.

The individual complaint procedure will adjust, more speedily and swiftly, the problems now subject to arbitration as well as other disputes not covered specifically by the decree. While remarking that the elimination of dubious or imaginary complaints, or trivial disagreements arising out of the ordinary bargaining by which pictures are licensed" might be a serious problem, the committee left wide latitude in the rules to make certain that no just grievance would be ignored.

Reporting on the balance of the trade practices program submitted by the subcommittee on intra-industry relations the UMPI committee of the whole said that each company agreed to reaffirm their policy against short subjects forcing; and promised a continuing consideration of ways to reduce the cost, delay and restrictions of arbitration under the consent decree.

At the request of exhibitor members all companies have written exhibitors, or exhibitor organizations, avowing that forcing of short subjects is contrary to policy. The distributors have offered full hearing to any such charges against their branches or salesmen.

The UMPI committee described this first report of its accomplishments as merely outlining the substance of agreements reached.

The 29 page report on the activities of the United Motion Picture Industry to date was released by Leon Bamberger, executive secretary. It traced the history of the unity movement, outlined its organizational structure and summarized its aims and activities to date.

First Objectives of Program Cited

Based on the proceedings of UMPI from inception to date it described the fundamental objectives of the program as follows:

"1. The promotion of harmonious relations among the several divisions of the motion picture industry and all engaged therein to the end that all may co-operate fully and with confidence in all matters affecting the interests of the industry as a whole.

"2. Recognition of the exhibitor associations and the selling organizations of the several distributors, both national and regional, as the outposts of good will of the motion picture industry and the utilization thereof as far as possible in carrying out the unity program.

"3. The adjustment within the industry on principles of conciliation and mutual consent of all grievances of a substantial nature which one division or a member thereof may have against another division or member thereof.

"4. The creation of the appropriate machinery of co-operation to give effect to the fundamentals of the unity program, on the assumption that the co-operation and services of all persons connected with the industry will be made available for this purpose, but utilizing as far as possible the exhibitor associations and the selling organizations."

The finding of a better method of selling than the five picture plan represented the first concrete endeavor of the UMPI movement and has occupied by far the greatest part of its attention to date, the committee commented.

Taxation Committee Fully Organized

The UMPI Committee on Taxation has been fully organized, the report continued. Through the executive secretary and the national committee local subcommittees have been organized in each exchange territory from independent and affiliated exhibitors and a representative of the distributors. These three-man boards are ready with machinery that can be put into immediate action to represent the entire industry in any local tax discussion.

The Committee on Coordination of Policy and Action in Protecting the Good Name and Integrity of the Industry as a Whole has met several times, the report said, and has made "several constructive recommendations" in line with its purpose. Pending establishment of a permanent UMPI organization and program it will continue to advise the various elements of the industry on the presentation, particularly to outsiders, of a constructive viewpoint on all branches of the industry.

The Committee on Advertising has met several times, but is delaying action on several suggestions for united institutional promotion until permanent organization and financing is assured. It has recommended that a survey of audience appeal, and advertising outlets be undertaken.

The Committee on Priorities elected Joseph Bernhard chairman. Mr. Bernhard, who has been theatre chairman of the War Activities Committee priorities division was liaison to the exhibitor members of UMPI also.

WASHINGTON TALKS ABOUT FREEZING THEATRE EQUIPMENT

Wider Ban Expected To Follow Ruling Against All Cooling Apparatus

Washington, on Wednesday, heard that Donald Nelson's War Production Board, which daily is ruling on what the nation, its industries and individuals can do with what during the war, is considering freezing, then rationing motion picture and other theatre equipment. May 31st was mentioned as the date of application.

Last Friday, a freezing order was effected on the manufacturing and installation of all new air conditioning equipment in theatres. Theatres which had no air conditioning units as of May 15th will have none for the duration. It is estimated that 80 per cent of the nation's motion picture theatres do not have genuine air conditioning and that 65 per cent have no mechanical cooling system of any kind.

Only war and essential civilian requirements are excluded from the air conditioning order, "Limitation Order No. L-38," issued in Washington by the Division of Industry Operations, WPB, over the signature of J. S. Knowlson, division director.

With respect to the War Production Board's overall policy on theatre equipment, no order has yet been issued. It had been widely expected that one would appear in May, with or without priority privileges specifically applying to the motion picture industry. There is now some feeling in the Capital, albeit unofficial, that theatre equipment and supplies are ultimately due for some sort of rationing, actual application being preceded by a freezing order.

Meanwhile, the motion picture industry, at mid-week, was still waiting issuance by the War Production Board of an announcement of the industry's proposal, long since filed with the WPB, to adhere to a voluntary conservation of materials sufficient to meet WPB requirements. The plan is said to have been received with approval by high officials of the WPB.

No Air Conditioning Orders To Be Filled

Last Friday's WPB order freezing the manufacturing of air conditioning, and designed to stop installations for personal comfort in theatres, restaurants, hotels and similar public places, applies also to unfilled orders on file prior to May 15th. Dealers and manufacturers are ordered to divert such ordered units to essential uses.

For the next 90 days, only the Army, Navy and Maritime Commission will be permitted to contract for beverage coolers, individual room coolers, cooled display cases and other similar types of equipment. After August 15th, production of these items will be halted completely.

Theatres with cooling systems also face curtailment in the purchase of new refrigerants. Supplies are still available, but, as in the case of Freon, they can be obtained only on a rationing basis. Allotments are being calculated on the basis of past consumption and the manner in which the cooling unit is operated.

TRADE LAUDED FOR FIRE PREVENTION

The industry drew praise for its fire prevention activities at the 46th annual convention of the National Fire Protection Association International in Atlantic City last week, according to executives returning to New York.

It was pointed out by Richard E. Vernor, chairman of the committee on visual education, that there had been only one small fire in an exchange during 1941, with a loss of $200. From January 1, 1926, through December 31, 1941, Mr. Vernor said, 14 fires had occurred in exchanges throughout the country and the total loss was only $4,594.

No more copper may be used by equipment manufacturers for motion picture apparatus or replacement parts, the WPB ordered this week. Order No. M-9-C prohibits any further use of copper in equipment fabrication. Stocks on hand may be delivered, however. The order does not affect the copper coating on carbons. Dealers, however, urge all projectionists to intensify their efforts to save and return copper drippings from their arcs.

Conservation Theme Of RCA Meeting

RCA district service managers and home office executives have completed a three-day discussion of present-day theatre service operations in the light of the necessity of conserving existing motion picture theatre equipment and supplies, it was announced Wednesday by W. L. Jones, RCA National Service Manager, in New York.

"Steps already have been taken to cooperate fully with the industry and with the IATSE 10-point conservation program. Future plans to assist exhibitors in keeping theatres operating under war conditions were covered thoroughly," said Mr. Jones.

Those attending the meeting included District Service Managers J. Mauran, Boston; W. F. Hardman, New York; K. P. Haywood, Philadelphia; C. R. Underhill, Pittsburgh; M. D. Faige, Atlanta; L. R. Yoh, Cleveland; J. P. Ware, Chicago; G. F. Sandore, Kansas City; and J. O. Hill, Dallas. A. E. Jackson, West Coast Photophone Sales Chief, planed in to attend.

Camden officials who participated in the discussions included Edward C. Cahill, Photophone Division Manager; John West, Manager of District Operations; W. L. Jones; F. W. Wentker, Assistant Manager of Photophone Division; Adolph Goodman, Assistant Service Manager; Homer Snook, RCA Theatre Equipment Sales Manager.

Radio Considers Pool of Parts

Radio stations, faced with a shortage of replacement parts for their transmitters are studying a plan to gather all available spare parts into a common pool. Chairman James L. Fly, of the Defense Communications Board, this week revealed the plan, describing it as an effort to insure that no station will be forced off the air during wartime for lack of equipment.

A meeting of the Board, scheduled in Washington for Thursday, was to discuss means of carrying out the proposal, intended to alleviate shortages caused by WPB curbs on the manufacture of new equipment, and to take the fullest advantage of current stocks.

The television industry, which last week received permission from the FCC to reduce the number of minimum weekly hours for commercial stations from 15 to 4 is also studying a pool of both equipment and engineering talent. The curtailed operation order was generally interpreted as a step towards conserving supplies and releasing technicians for war service while enabling the half dozen stations now telecasting to keep on the air.

New Theatre Equipment Scarce in Australia

George Applegate, manager of Western Electric Company, Ltd., of Australia, reports to the Western Electric Export Division that new theatre equipment is practically unobtainable on the island continent. He also reports that the manufacturing facilities of the company in Australia are running 24 hours a day and 75 per cent is devoted to war work.

Ed Warn, manager of the New Zealand office, reports that he has offered the company's facilities to all New Zealand exhibitors in the interests of keeping the wheels of the entertainment industry turning.

U. S., SCHINE SIGN ARMISTICE, CIRCUIT GIVES UP 16 HOUSES

Agreement Postpones Trial for Two Years and Bans Theatre Acquisitions

The Government's second field anti-trust suit against a large circuit and major distributors ended as it began in Buffalo federal court Tuesday. The suit, against the Schine circuit, affiliates and Universal, United Artists and Columbia, was postponed for two years.

Under the agreement, reached after urgent, and late, conferences, the Government asked for a temporary injunction against the Schine circuit, to which the company's lawyers did not object. This does not mean a consent decree but merely a cessation of hostilities.

The agreement provides:

1. The circuit will not acquire theatres for two years in specified localities.
2. The circuit will dispose of 16 houses acquired since the suit was filed in 1939.
3. The Government has asked that trial of all defendants, the distributors included, be postponed for two years, until May 19, 1944.

Immediate participants in the pact were John Caskey of the law firm of Dwight, Harris, Koegel and Kasky, and Willard McKay, representing the Schine interests; and Robert L. Wright, assistant U. S. attorney general, who succeeded Seymour Simon as prosecutor of the case.

Other lawyers at the court Monday and Tuesday were Louis D. Frohlich, and Max Rose, of Schwartz and Frohlich, Columbia attorneys; Edward C. Raftery, and Benjamin Pepper, of O'Brien, Driscoll, and Raftery, United Artists and Universal counsel; and Ralston Irvine, of Donovan, Newton, Leisure, and Lombard, special counsel representing the five majors in the Federal consent decree.

The Schine circuit of 150 theatres in five Eastern states, is accused of conspiring with the companies named, to force out of business rivals in competitive situations, by erecting certain theatres under advantageous conditions, and combining with the majors to deprive competitors of product.

Seventy-eight or more exhibitor witnesses were scheduled to appear for the Government, their names early this week still undisclosed.

Order Seen End of Suit

The temporary order and stipulation was regarded as virtually the end of the Government's anti-monopoly suit pending since that date. Federal Judge John Knight readily agreed to move the trial date ahead two years, remarking, "The court is pleased to escape the arduous work in trying this case. I am very glad to approve the order. As counsel has pointed out, it has its benefits."

The judge referred to large expenditures that would have been incurred and time that would have been consumed by "busy men."

Section Seven of the settlement forbids distributor defendants to condition picture licensing to Schine theatres which are competitive to independents, upon licensing of pictures "to any theatre or theatres owned and operated by the consenting defendants in a city, town or village, in which all" theatres are operated by the defendants.

DIVORCE HEARING SET BACK AGAIN

Hearing on the Department of Justice demand that Paramount and Twentieth Century-Fox divest themselves of 36 theatres allegedly acquired in violation of the consent decree was postponed again by Judge Henry W. Goddard, in New York Federal Court, on Tuesday, to June 16th.

The Government's third "field" suit is against the Griffith circuit and majors in Oklahoma City; its trial date, not known.

The first "key anti-trust suit" was against the distributors, in New York City. Following the signing of the consent decree by five of them, they were dropped from the "field" suits at that time on schedule or planned; and only the "Little Three," Universal, United Artists, and Columbia, remained. The latter was dropped from the defendants' list early in the Nashville suit, the decision of which at mid-week still rested with Judge Davies, of Nashville Federal Court.

Circuit Ordered To Sell 16 Theatres

Under the temporary order and stipulation signed Tuesday by Government and defense counsel, and approved by Judge Knight, Schine Circuit Theatres and its affiliates, within twelve months, must dispose of all their interests in 16 theatres acquired since the filing of the anti-trust complaint against the theatre circuit August 7, 1939.

The theatres are in 13 towns in New York, Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia and Maryland, as follows:

Webster, Rochester, N. Y.; Strand, Cumberland, Md.; Plaza, Malone, N. Y.; Memorial, Mt. Vernon, O.; Paramount, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Opera House, Lexington, Ky.; Ada Meade, Lexington, Ky.; Palace, Clifton Springs, N. Y.; Scotia, Scotia, N. Y.; Viv, Corbin, Ky.; State and Appalachia, Appalachia, Va.; Liberty, Pikeville, Ky.; a 50 per cent interest in the Margie Grand, Harlan, Ky., with permission to retain the interest held prior to acquisition of the leasehold in the theatre, and the Cla-Zel and Lyric, Bowling Green, O., with permission to retain the interests held in those prior to acquisition of the leaseholds.

The order requiring the divestiture of the theatre interests states that the defendants agree to offer the properties promptly after the order is entered in court to those from whom they were acquired "for the amount of the capital investments of defendants therein," and that if not disposed of to such persons within 20 days, the theatre interests shall then be offered to "independent exhibitors" for the same purchase price "and upon fair and reasonable terms."

Sale price of the theatres involved was established at cost prices set forth in supplementary papers. The highest figure was $235,000, plus $43,100.73 spent in capital improvements for the Strand, Cumberland, Md.

That section of the order which declared void licenses and franchises between the defendants and the distributors, which have as their period more than a year, brought protest from Louis Frohlich, Columbia attorney, who noted his client's franchise did not expire until 1943. He remarked: "This deprives Columbia of a valuable contract." He added the case settlement "rather leaves the distributor suspended in the air."

Before arising, Mr. Frolich said he was speaking not only in behalf of Columbia, but United Artists and Universal as well. He said none of them were consulted on the action, and were made to believe, he added, that "it was none of our business."

The order and stipulation, according to Mr. Wright, was motivated largely by conditions as they are today and the extreme pressure on the time of both court and opposing counsel a six-month trial would involve.

MGM, PARAMOUNT, REPUBLIC MEET ON NEW SELLING

Product Plans, Wartime Policies Discussed at Regional Sales Sessions

Product plans and wartime selling conditions received primary attention at district and regional sales meetings held this week by MGM and Republic in Chicago and at sessions of Paramount in Kansas City. Columbia and RKO reported on sales drives; advertising and publicity executives of the Warner Bros. home office gathered for conferences in New York, and Universal announced that Alfred Hitchcock will direct his first picture for the Jack H. Skirball producing unit.

Addressing the three-day MGM district managers' sales meeting at the Hotel Blackstone, Chicago on Monday, Ed Kuykendall, president of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Hugh Bruen, director of Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, commended William F. Rodgers, MGM sales chief and chairman of United Motion Picture Industry, for his work toward industry unity. Jack Kirsch, president of Illinois Allied, and John Rugar, president of Intermountain Theatres Association, Salt Lake City, also attended the session. All exhibitor representatives were guests of MGM at luncheon that day.

Headed by Mr. Rodgers, home offices executives of the company were on hand for the meeting, at which new season sales plans and policies were discussed. MGM will hold no national sales convention this year.

Principal topic for consideration at the sessions was the problem of small town and city theatres whose patronage has been materially reduced by migrations of war workers and other wartime factors affecting the exhibition field.

In addition to Mr. Rodgers, those attending the meetings at the Blackstone were: E. M. Saunders, E. K. O'Shea, J. E. Flynn, E. W. Aaron, A. F. Cummings, H. M. Richey, T. Dillard and E. Lee, from New York office; and district managers J. J. Bowen, New York; C. E. Kessnich, Atlanta; M. N. Wolf, Boston; G. A. Hickey, Los Angeles; J. J. Maloney, Pittsburgh; B. Bishop, Jr., Kansas City; J. P. Byrne, Denver; R. Berger, Washington; H. P. Wolfberg, St. Louis; S. A. Shirley, Chicago and Robert Lynch, Philadelphia.

MGM to Aid Exhibitors Losing to War Population Shifts

Recognizing the exhibitor's problem caused by shifting U. S. populations because of war, W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager of MGM, at Tuesday's meeting of the company's district and division managers at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, announced that every theatre situation adversely affected by war conditions would be reviewed, and that totally disregarding precedent, consideration would be given in accordance with the necessity of the situation.

Mr. Rodgers said, "I do not believe it is possible to approach this subject, which we recognize particularly in small towns and subsequent runs, on the basis of a general formula.

"However, we have instructed our field men that they must and will realize that there is a large number of small situations which, through no fault of their own, are possibly precariously situated, and no legitimate theatre operation will be over-looked."

Taking full advantage to press forward the Unity-trade practice movement, Mr. Rodgers read and explained to his district managers the complete plan, particularly stressing the necessity to put into immediate effect the conciliation part of the plan as applying to territorial and individual complaints.

In order that they could hear his instructions to his field force on both subjects, Mr. Rodgers had invited Ed Kuykendall, John Rugar, Hugh Bruen and Jack Kirsch, exhibitor leaders from both sides, to be present at the meeting.

The MGM executive charged his MGM district managers not only with the responsibility of giving their personal cooperation to the Unity plan, but also pointed out to them the important role they would play in acquainting the public with the tremendous advantages that will accrue through sincere and aggressive carrying through of the Unity movement.

"I am thoroughly convinced," Mr. Rodgers declared, "that once the public realizes the cooperation of the United exhibitors of the country and the courageous and unselfish attitude on the part of the companies which are cooperating in this movement, they will feel a certain security and will understand that the industry is now better equipped to carry on its important role of furnishing entertainment so vital during times like these and that it is better equipped to make its contribution towards the maintenance of our American morale.

"I have every confidence that the new selling plan, when sanctioned by the Department of Justice, will furnish theatre owners with a more flexible method of buying their product, and the granting to theatre owners of cancellation privileges over and beyond the pictures they now can cancel on religious, racial and moral grounds will mean more competition for play dates, and that spells better motion pictures.

"The settling within the industry of whatever disputes may arise will bring peace of mind to everyone at a time when our first concern must be on how to do our part," Mr. Rodgers asserted.

Paramount's Series of Regionals

The fourth of Paramount's series of five two-day regional sales meetings began on Monday, at Hotel Muehlbach, Kansas City, with Neil F. Agnew, vice-president and general sales manager, and Charles M. NEW ENGLAND INDEPENDENTS QUIT ALLIED OVER 'UNITY'

Resignation Follows Filing of Protest on Plan with Justice Department

Independent Exhibitors, Inc., the New England unit of the Allied States Association, resigned on Monday from the parent national organization. Renouncing the Allied endorsement of the UMPI sales plan, the unit headed by Frank C. Lydon, of Dorchester, Mass., announced that henceforth it would go its own way.

The New England unit's way, at the moment, will take the form of vigorous opposition to the selling plan advanced by the Unity movement as a substitute for the consent decree, it was indicated. The New England exhibitors have registered consistent opposition to the blocks-of-12 and partial cancellation plan since early in the course of UMPI deliberations.

At the Chicago meeting of the national directors of Allied two weeks ago the Independent Exhibitors, Inc. delegates were reported to have argued vigorously against an all-out approval of the UMPI selling plan. Previously the New England exhibitors had advanced two counter proposals of their own for a selling plan.

W. L. Bendslev, secretary of the association, said the decision to resign from Allied came at a meeting of the independent exhibitors in Boston on May 8th. It was unanimously approved and a letter dispatched to M. A. Rosenberg, National Allied president, stressing the difference in opinion between New England and the national group.

Protest Filed with Justice Department

Also, Mr. Bendslev revealed the unit had filed a protest with the Department of Justice against the new selling plan, in memoranda to Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general, and Robert Wright, of the motion picture unit, asking enforcement of the decree.

The letter to Mr. Rosenberg said that the unit voted to resign from Allied, as of May 31st, "because of that body's endorsement of the UMPI sales plan which is diametrically opposed to the best interests of the members of the Independent Exhibitors, Inc." It was signed by Mr. Bendslev.

The Independent was founded over 25 years ago and has been a member of Allied since the latter organization was formed. It represents almost 200 theatre owners in the six states of the New England area.

Boston territory exhibitors continued to express unaltered opposition to the unity plan. Many expressed displeasure with the consent decree but added that they regarded the UMPI plan as "even worse." They expressed confidence too that the Independent resignation, the first open break in exhibitor ranks over the unity movement, would be followed soon by similar action in other territories.

The resignation of the New England group, which had been reported in prospect for several weeks, was accepted "with regrets" by the national organization but no effort will be made to win the Independents back into the fold, it was indicated. Allied leaders were clear in expressing their belief that the national directors' action approving the UMPI plan reflected the wishes of the majority of exhibitors.

Abram F. Myers, chairman of the national board and general counsel of Allied, commenting on the New England action said the board had sent Mr. Lydon a resolution accepting the resignation with regret, and expressing the hope the unit would reconsider. Attached was a bill for arrears in dues accumulated in recent years. Further action by National Allied was deferred until June 1st.

Endorsement by the Allied Board of the UMPI plan "merely gave effect to the views of the majority, which is the only manner in which an organization founded on democratic principles can function," Mr. Myers said.

"In addition, may I add my personal regret that this action by New England should come at a time when far-sighted leaders in all branches are seeking cooperation in meeting war emergencies. I can understand the resentment of the New England exhibitors with their comparatively large theatres, particularly those in the Interstate Circuit of Boston that they will not participate in the proposed cancellation privilege because their average film rental exceeds $200. However, for every Allied member denied the privilege, dozens will enjoy it, and the will of the majority prevailed."

The New England group rejected the UMPI substitute for decree selling because it charged it provided insufficient relief for the small exhibitor. In its counter proposal adopted at a meeting in Boston on March 12th Independent Exhibitors, Inc., called for:

Continued blocks-of-five selling, with trade shows of a completed block and the sale, by advance identification, of a second block of five; the pair not to exceed 25 per cent of total production. One cancellation out of each five to be permitted, regardless of price, and sales not to be conditioned on one another. Price of each picture to be specified in advance and redesignation prohibited, except by agreement.

Pledges of wholehearted support for the UMPI sales measure by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were meanwhile forthcoming again from Ed Kuykendall, president. In a membership bulletin reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week he called the unity formula the best possible immediate substitute for the decree blocks-of-five. Again this week he urged exhibitor support and declared that with the sales plan the unity movement had laid the precedent for still other steps towards trade practice reforms.

MPTOA ASKS STUDY OF ARBITRATION

Arbitration should be one of the next subjects to receive careful attention from UMPI a bulletin this week from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America declared. It listed five fundamental defects in arbitration at present and proposed a six fold revision.

The MPTOA asserts that:

(1) arbitrators should know the film business in order to decide its complaints and grievances intelligently;

(2) "awards should not be subject to appeal to New York for final decisions by an Appeal Board that is unfamiliar either with the business or with local situations";

(3) arbitration should have more scope and authority and fewer restrictions, conditions and qualifications;

(4) mediation should be the required first step on every complaint;

(5) it should not be necessary for an exhibitor to hire a lawyer to present a complaint or defend interests at a hearing.

The national theatre association also asked reduction of costs through an official transcript kept by the administrator; reduction in time; oral appeal hearings; and the right to amend or consolidate pleadings up to the close of the hearing.

Jersey Allied Honors Cole

New Jersey Allied this week announced that its 23rd annual convention in Atlantic City on June 3, 4 and 5 would be devoted principally to a round table discussion of exhibition problems in wartime. A number of national industry leaders have been invited to the meetings at the Ambassador Hotel and Colonel H. A. Cole of Texas, former national president of Allied, will be guest of honor at a testimonial banquet on the concluding day.

The three-day meeting opens Wednesday, June 3rd, with a meeting of the New Jersey directors. They will hear committee reports and appoint a nominating committee for the election of officers and directors.

Thursday has been designated as National Allied Day with an eastern regional Allied meeting in the morning. It is also reported that most of the National Allied board of directors will be present for the Colonel Cole testimonial dinner. They will probably hold an unofficial executive session. New Jersey officers will be elected on Thursday and the first round table session on wartime problems at 2 P.M. will be presided over by Harry H. Lowenstein, president.

Friday, the convention delegates will hear from the sales managers of the principal distributors, and committee reports will be submitted to the general membership meeting.

New Slate Threatens Walsh IATSE Regime

Possibility of Fight for Presidency Seen at Ohio Convention on June 1st

Richard Walsh's presidency of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, may be threatened by the intended candidacy of Vincent Jacobi, business agent for the New York Stagehands Local 1, which was reported in New York this week.

Mr. Walsh dismissed the report with: "It's all so silly; I'll do my talking at the convention." The convention will be held June 1st, at Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. Walsh was elected president of the Alliance by the executive board in November to fill out George Browne's term, when the former president was convicted, along with Willie Bioff, of extortion, and sentenced to eight years in prison.

Mr. Jacobi recently was reelected Local 1's business agent.

Said to be a salient point in the "case" against Mr. Walsh is the further possibility of organizing fields of labor within IA jurisdiction, it being contended the international has not sufficiently heeded its potentialities.

Mr. Walsh's term extends to 1944. However, the convention is to vote on changes in the constitution and by-laws, among which is the proposal that presidential terms be two, instead of four, years. Whether such a change would affect Mr. Walsh's current tenure, and whether clamor for an election now, would develop, could not be foretold in New York this week.

Publicists Open Talks with Warners

Meanwhile, in New York, the Screen Publicists Guild began conferences this week with Warners to have that company sign the closed shop contract signed two weeks ago by the other major distributors for the advertising and publicity workers in the New York home offices.

The Guild will meet with Republic shortly, Joseph Gould, its president, said Monday.

Meeting Thursday night, May 14th, the union endorsed President Roosevelt's program for keeping living costs down; but it opposed "wage-freezing legislation as destructive of this program and inimical to the pursuance of the war effort."

The SPG News, organ of the union, disclosed last week the organization's action committee was again considering CIO affiliation. Such affiliation was rejected by the membership last year. Subsequent experiences during negotiation with the distributors, however, have, according to Guild spokesmen, convinced them of the desirability of re-examining the advantages to be obtained from affiliation with a national union.

The CIO's union in the film industry, Local 109, Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, had some business of moment with the heads of the companies last week, it appeared. Shrouded by secrecy, executives of Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, and Columbia, were reported to have conferred with Phillip Murray, CIO president. Inasmuch as the CIO has no other entrance into the film business, except through its local 109, which has been gaining steadily among home office white collar workers, the inference was that the meeting discussed the contracts the local would seek for its members in those offices, and other plans the CIO might be maturing.

Meanwhile, the clerical workers at RKO were to vote Friday, under National Labor Relations Board auspices, for or against the local, as their collective bargaining agency.

The Screen Office Employees Guild, Hollywood, last week accepted a counter-proposal from the producers, of an eight per cent pay rise, retroactive to January 1st.

The Essaness circuit, Chicago, has raised the wages of unorganized employees 10 to 20 per cent. The action was to meet the rise in living costs.

Moran Replaces Nick in St. Louis

E. V. Moran has been elected business agent of the St. Louis stagehands' union in that city, replacing John P. Nick, now in prison serving a five-year term for racketeering. Moran defeated William Menaugh. Other officers elected were Leroy Upton, president; William Kostedt, vice-president; C. O. Newlin, financial secretary; William Spear, recording secretary. All were bitter opponents of Nick.

Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, arrived in New York from the Coast this week, for a two to three weeks' stay.

The Screen Directors Guild, Hollywood, has reelected George Stevens president. It also approved the revise agreement with the producers. The revision gives free lance directors of westerns costing $15,000 or less a minimum of $300 weekly; of serials, $250 weekly.

$100,000 Industry Quota For New York Fund

The amusement division of the Greater New York Fund this year must raise $100,000, 20 per cent more than last year. The quota was announced Tuesday, at a special committee meeting of the division, in New York's Astor Hotel, presided over by J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel of Loew's.

Speakers were Mr. Rubin; former New York City Mayor James J. Walker, who asserted the Fund was administered uniquely with "modesty, intelligence, and economy"; and Thomas D. Lamont. Mr. Rubin and Mr. Lamont appealed for the amusement industry's fullest support, noting that the drive quota as a whole was $5,000,000.

Greater New York Fund helps support 400 charitable agencies. Contributors may earmark gifts for favorite charities.

At the luncheon were leaders in stage, screen, and other sectors of the show world. They said the meeting was one of the most enthusiastic held. Mr. Walker's address was particularly applauded.

Allied asks ASCAP for Revised Rates

Initial discussion to revise theatre licensing rates of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, was held on Tuesday in New York at the Society's offices, with a special committee of Allied States Association. Meeting with John G. Paine, ASCAP general manager, and Charles Schwartz, ASCAP general-counsel, were Colonel H. A. Cole, chairman of the Allied committee; Harry Lowenstein, president of Allied New Jersey, and Sidney Samuelson, general manager of Eastern Pennsylvania Allied.

Allied has formulated a proposal for de-distribution of ASCAP licensing rates whereby smaller theatres will pay a lower rate than at present while the slack would be taken up in part by the larger houses. It is indicated that the net result in revenue to ASCAP will not be very much different from the $2,000,000 now collected annually from theatres by the Society. Exhibitor opinion for some time has been that ASCAP's theatre rates should be brought more into line with the general reduction in the organization's rates to broadcasters, effected last year, following its ten-month music-war with the networks.

A second attack upon ASCAP by exhibitors, fourteen independent Brooklyn houses in this instance, for alleged violations of the Sherman anti-trust laws, was made last week in a suit filed in the U. S. District Court, New York. Named with ASCAP as defendants were Gene Buck, its former president, and Gustave Shirmer. The suit was in most respects similar to the first action brought in April by 157 theatres.

New Anti-Trust Action Filed

Claim that the eight majors and Republic violated two state laws by allegedly conspiring to create a monopoly in Brooklyn was made Saturday in the New York Supreme Court by the Signal Theatre Corp. and the Copark Theatres, Inc., operators of the Fenway, Park and Coliseum theatres, Brooklyn. Specifically attacked are the Loew's and RKO circuits, the plaintiffs maintaining that they dictate virtually their own terms on films in Brooklyn, under an alleged agreement to divide all major product.

The suit is the first against the film industry on anti-trust charges under state laws, Emil K. Ellis, plaintiffs' attorney, declared in filing. According to the complaint, Section 340 of the General Business Law, commonly called the Donnelly Anti-trust Act, and Section 580 of the Penal Law which labels a misdemeanor any conspiracy to interfere with trade and commerce, have been violated.

The complaint alleges that the Fenway played day and date with Loew's Bay Ridge theatre in 1934 when the Fenway was owned by RKO. With RKO disposing of its interest in 1935, Loew's allegedly "arbitrarily and illegally" induced distributors to give the Bay Ridge 28 days clearance over the house, it is stated.

Richey Stresses Film War Role

Entertainment is still the paramount role of the screen in wartime, Henderson M. Richey, exhibitor relations contact and spokesman for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, told the New Jersey Federation of Women's Clubs in convention at Atlantic City on Thursday.

Speaking on the part that motion pictures play in wartime, he pointed out to the women's club leaders that the motion picture industry not only had assumed many important assignments of public instruction and information during the war, but had seen its importance as an entertainment medium greatly increased by the need for wholesome relaxation from the strain of an all-out victory effort.

He cited President Roosevelt's statement that the screen is "one of our most effective means of informing and entertaining our citizens" and explained the many ways in which this was being done.

Although "Mr. Roosevelt did not include in his four freedoms the right to laugh . . . I believe that the number one job of motion pictures is to furnish that relaxation which comes from being entertained," the Metro spokesman said. "I know of no better morale builder than a good laugh. As I see it, it is not only the right to laugh, but to be able to laugh and to want to laugh; and laughter comes only from security, contentment and the realization that those we love and the institutions we cherish are safe from any assault," Mr. Richey said.

He detailed the contributions of the industry in the production of information and special war training films, participation in war bond sales, special collections and other extraordinary calls.

Mr. Richey recalled previous attacks on the industry and its successful refutation of the charges of propaganda and self-interest leveled against it during the Senate propaganda investigation of September, 1941.

"Since few industries are placed in the position to do so much in times of stress and still continue to do its job of entertaining the great American public, I hope your reaction to unfair criticism will be like mine; one of resentment, for I regard the industry as a huge potential power for service," he told the convention.

Syndicate To Distribute Truesdell Film Column

The Register and Tribune Syndicate, Des Moines, Iowa, has made arrangements to distribute John Truesdell's daily Hollywood news column and picture feature service. The syndicate plans an extensive promotion of the column for their newspaper client list. The syndicate announced that Mr. Truesdell will operate a full-time Hollywood bureau for his subscribing newspapers.

Theatre Burglars Caught

Smashing of a gang of four young burglars, who allegedly stole more than $2,000 in 14 theatre robberies in Philadelphia, was announced this week by police. They were arrested at the Lane theatre as suspicious characters after being found loitering around the house after midnight. Among other Philadelphia theatres claimed looted by the gang are the Astor, Logan, Liberty, Ridge, Bluebird, New Penn and the Casino.

Allen, CBS, Named In "Chan" Action

Fred Allen, Columbia Broadcasting System, twelve of its affiliated stations, Batchellor Enterprises, Inc. and Texas Co., Allen's sponsor, were named defendants last week in a copyright infringement suit filed in the U. S. district court by Eleanor Biggers Cole, widow of Earl Derr Biggers, creator of "Charlie Chan" stories. The federal court was asked to rule that Allen's periodic burlesques over the air of a Chinese detective were unfair competition which had hurt the sales value of "Charlie Chan" for films and radio.

Twenty-five motion pictures have been made by various producers depicting the adventures of the "widely known and imaginary Chinese character and detective," the complaint said. On April 2, 1941, Allen, it is charged, committed "deliberate piracy" by assertedly using material and episodes protected by copyright, it continued. Plans to sell "Chan" for additional films and for radio had been immeasurably damaged by the comedian's "false and unfair comments," the plaintiff declared.

Suit demands an injunction to restrain any further broadcasts, an order requiring the stations to surrender all records of previous broadcasts, and statutory damages of $250 for each claimed infringement.

Hale Hamilton Dies on Coast

Hale Hamilton, 62, screen actor and for many years a leading man on the stage, died on Tuesday, May 19th, of a cerebral hemorrhage at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Hollywood. He had been ill for the past four years. He leaves his widow, the former Grace La Rue, and a brother, John D. M. Hamilton, former chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Mr. Hamilton was born in Topeka, Kan., on February 28, 1880, studied at the Shattuck Military Academy and later took a law degree at the University of Kansas. He made his first stage appearance in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in 1899. He was most widely known, however, as the originator of the title role in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" in 1910. He was a leading man in many subsequent stage productions in New York, London. At one time he toured Australia and New Zealand with his own company.

He went to Hollywood in 1929 to play in "Listen, Lady," and settled in Santa Monica. He appeared in more than 25 screen roles during the next 10 years. His last screen appearance was in "The Adventures of Marco Polo."

Club Elects Officers

Three new officers were elected by the Reel Fellows Club at their meeting last week at the Congress Hotel, Chicago. Added to the list of officers were Harold Wirthwein, of Paramount Pictures, as second vice-president; Ted Meyers, of Universal Pictures, as assistant treasurer; and Sig Decker, Republic Pictures, as assistant secretary. It was decided to hold a picnic on June 26, at Thatcher Woods, Chicago, for member's wives and children. The last meeting of the organization, until next September, will be held June 21 at which branch and district managers will be invited as guests of the members.

Columbia Signs Langdon

Condon Gets 20th-Fox Post

Hal Horne, new director of advertising, exploitation and publicity for Twentieth Century-Fox, Tuesday announced the appointment of Richard Condon as publicity manager to succeed Earl Wingart, who resigned last Friday.

Frank Moneyhun, formerly assistant to A. M. Botsford, has been named manager of advertising. His former duties will be assumed by Max Youngstein. M. D. (Doc) Howe has been made exploitation manager, succeeding Rodney Bush, who has been transferred to special assignments.

Mr. Wingart was with the company for 10 years. Prior to that he was for 13 years connected with the Paramount publicity department.

Mr. Botsford will be in charge of publicity and exploitation for the company on the coast.

Maas Acting Head of 20th-Fox Department

Irving A. Maas, foreign service manager for Twentieth Century-Fox, has been appointed acting director of foreign distribution, a post vacated by the death of Walter J. Hutchinson. Mr. Maas will be in charge of the department until the board of directors of the company meets and appoints a successor to Mr. Hutchinson.

USO Promotion Shifted

Publicity operations for USO-Camp Shows, which have been handled on voluntary basis by the Hal Horne Organization, New York, since January, have been transferred to the Camp Shows' offices at 8 West 40th Street, for direct handling by Camp Shows. Hal Horne's appointment as publicity and advertising director of 20th Century-Fox necessitated the change in procedure.

Franchise for Free Shows

The Beaumont, Tex., city commission has granted franchise for 1942-43 to Nick La Rocca, Beaumont, for providing projection of free motion pictures at the City Park. Last year the franchise was granted a Houston theatre operator who failed to exercise the contract.

EXHIBITORS HOPEFUL DESPITE DIMOUT EXTENSION, RATIONS

Little Effect from Gas Limitation Noted; Night Baseball Banned in East

"Too early yet" was the consensus among exhibitors seeking this week to assay the effect upon boxoffices, of gasoline rationing in 17 Eastern states, and the Army's stringent regulation of lighting in the New York and New England area; regulations which are to be applied along the entire Eastern seaboard.

Opinions were varied, however, over the numerous factors affecting patrons' purses and desires, with the hope evident in industry circles that some factors would cancel others, and, in sum, not greatly change the situation.

It is thought likely that increased lack of consumer goods will allow more money to be spent at boxoffices, and that lack of gasoline, and consequently of pleasure motoring —a great competitor to theatres, along with allied amusements (beaches, parks, picnic places, etc.)—will also benefit theatres. However, dimouts and blackouts decrease the effectiveness of theatre advertising, and heavier taxes are coming.

Confusion in New York On Dimout Rules

In New York City, theatre owners hoped for an influx of suburbanites, who habitually spend summer weekends away. In the Broadway area, theatre operators whose houses are known, regardless of dimouts and blackouts, voiced hope for a record summer, adding to business already very good.

There was some confusion this week over the extent and interpretation of dimout orders, made more stringent by the police, at the behest of the Army.

The text of the order affecting theatre lighting was:

"All exterior lighting in connection with theatres, hotels, motion picture houses, concert halls, etc., must be extinguished with the exception of lights within the lobby of the theatre and lights of modified intensity on the under side of the marquee."

The order also required the extinguishing of all exterior lighting for advertising purposes, lighting directed on outdoor signs, flood lighting of outdoor areas, complete blackouts of all lighting above the 15th story and lights visible one mile at sea, and screening of all street, bridge, park and highway lighting.

The new rules provided that "areas used for outdoor boxing, concerts, dances, roller skating, parking fields and similar outdoor areas may be permitted to use exterior lights which must be hooded and of a modified intensity, with all light directed below the horizontal toward the ground."

Night Baseball Included in Ban

Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine also banned night baseball for the duration, bringing from Larry McPhail, general manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, and of the borough's ball park, Ebbets Field, a protest that the game at night had not been given a chance to prove it could be played without giving an upward glare of light.

RADIO WAR AID IS PRAISED

The voluntary contribution of broadcasters to the war effort was commended this week by William B. Lewis, assistant director of the Office of Facts and Figures in Washington.

Announcing that the OFF had accepted a voluntary offer from the National Association of Broadcasters and the major networks to donate time for Government announcements, under a plan which he outlined to the NAB convention, Mr. Lewis said it had not been necessary to "draft" the radio industry.

The new rules affecting New York City were expected to be applied shortly to the whole East Coast, in a 15 mile strip inland. Navy tests revealed that the glow from Bridgeport was visible 25 miles at sea.

The new rules make the horizontal angle of the lighting the absolute test and also require extinguishing of shaded lights where they are of sufficient strength to be reflected upward by the street, it was pointed out. Even basement windows are required to be extinguished if they shine upwards.

The New York Times moving electric news sign, belting its building in Times Square, was shut off this week. Since its erection in 1928 it had been the focus of many eyes in that sector every minute of its operation. When the first dimout occurred, it was exempted.

West Coast Gets Dimout Order

The West Coast, from the Oregon border to Santa Maria, California, is under a dimout ordered last week by the Office of Civilian Defense. In that area, however, night baseball is still permitted. Authorities said they would determine whether the game contributed to the silhouetting of ships at sea, which was the reason for the dimout.

Last week the dimout was lifted from 60 miles of Long Island Sound coastline facing Long Island and embracing New Haven, Milford, Stratford, West Haven, East Haven, Branford, Guilford, Westbrook, Clinton, Orange and Madison. It was explained that the light silhouetting ships came from Long Island, not from the mainland.

New York City's fourth borough-wide blackout was held in Queens Monday, affecting 88 theatres serving 1,414,000 persons. Business at theatres fell in some instances as much as 20 per cent. However, they were pleased at the time: a 20 minute period, beginning at 9:30. Theatre men pointed out most tickets were sold by then. Expected shortly is a Manhattan blackout, and then a city-wide darkening.

Brooklyn last week had a blackout, affecting 220 theatres, serving almost 3,000,000. The borough's downtown first run theatres, the Paramount, Albee, Fox and Metropolitan reported a business decline up to 33 per cent. A survey of neighborhood theatres showed their recepits off an average of 20 per cent.

Business Reported Off in Boston

Boston theatres, which suffered in blackouts and dimouts, report no notable result from gasoline rationing in its first week. However, the drastic dimout last week caused business to fall by 50 per cent, with much of the loss ascribed to the reluctance of parents to allow youngsters to theatres in the semi-darkness. Especially hit, have been the suburban theatres, and the drive-ins.

In Washington D. C., a better than average weekend resulted, industry observers thought, from strong attractions, and the lack of gasoline. There were boxoffice lines at some houses, downtown. However, the city's second complete blackout, last week, hurt grosses in those theatres approximately 10 per cent, with late shows bearing the brunt. How much neighborhood theatres were affected was not disclosed, but some said attendance was very sparse, patrons apparently fearing to venture outside their homes.

New Haven theatres enjoyed a boom over the weekend. Neighborhood theatre parking spaces were full. Exhibitors of the area are pleased at the lifting of the dimout, although Saybrook and New London remain blacked out. The dimout, obtaining several weeks, had been drastic: marquee lights were completely out; street lights out, or dimmed. Streets were patrolled by police and wardens. The general effect had been to keep patrons at home. And the summer cottage trade appeared doomed.

The Connecticut State Police Department is asking exhibitors to install emergency or auxiliary lighting systems, in case of air raid or other damage, and theatres are gradually making the addition.

Gasoline Rationing Has Little Effect

Gasoline rationing had no effect upon theatre business in Norfolk, Virginia. Theatres in that overcrowded defense-area city played to capacity over the weekend.

Northern New Jersey exhibitors noticed no difference in business in the early days of the gasoline rationing, and reported good attendance at neighborhod and suburban theatres.

South Carolina theatres were unaffected this week by gasoline rationing. At Greenville, an increase in attendance over the weekend was noted, from persons who normally would use automobiles for pleasure.

The first weekend of gas rationing in Philadelphia last week brought theatres a slight increase in patronage. Mid-city, neighborhood and suburban houses on Sunday reported "as good or better" business than usual. Officials estimated that 5,000 to 10,000 fans stayed away from the Sunday double-header baseball game at Shibe Park because of the gasoline situation.

Gas Rations, Dimouts Felt at Boxoffices

The parks in the city reported bigger crowds than usual. In the Atlantic City area, including the nearby seashore resorts, police reported "practically no" cars with Pennsylvania and New York licenses. An Atlantic City Chamber of Commerce survey showed amusement places, theatres, restaurants and parking lots were suffering a business loss. The exclusive Rehobeth Beach, Del., was virtually deserted on Sunday, despite perfect weather.

Weekend theatre business in Baltimore suffered none from gasoline rationing, in the first weekend. There were reports of losses, however, from theatres in environs.

Night Traffic in California Halted

All night automobile traffic along California coast highways and secondary roads, last week was halted by the state's highway patrol. The order precedes an expected dimout order for Southern California.

Theatres in communities along the highways anticipate a sharp drop in attendance. Many depend upon travel from inland.

The Los Angeles Theatre Defense Bureau is planning a uniform system of paging defense officials, policemen, firemen, wardens and doctors from theatres. Named to a committee to establish such a system, by B. V. Sturdivant, Bureau director, are: Stanley Meyer, chairman; Marco Wolff, Carl Walker, R. D. Whitson and S. D. Perkins.

A new experiment in special shows for defense workers was launched by Stanley Benford, manager of Warners' Colonial Theatre, Philadelphia. Identified as a "War Workers Sunrise Prevue," the shows are scheduled on Saturdays at 7:30 and 9 a.m., each Saturday morning, at which time a screening of the coming week's attraction is previewed. The early morning shows were introduced at the request of the personnel directors at the war plants in the neighborhood of the theatre.

Wartime Programs For War Workers

Springfield, Massachusetts, theatres are shifting to wartime programs for war workers. The Arcade and Paramount open daily at 10:30 A. M., and the Loew's Poli has a special show every Thursday morning at nine. The Capitol has many early Wednesday shows.

The Garden attempted a very early morning show, for workers who finished their night's task. This started at midnight Fridays. It was abandoned after one month. It proved unpopular.

The only early morning entertainment to catch "hold" is the midnight to dawn dance and swimming party at the local Y.M.C.A.

A 700 seat theatre, the Aero, with Edward Perotka managing, will open at the Glenn Martin Company's recreation center, May 31st. The center is near its airplane manufacturing plant, in the Baltimore area. The company will operate the house.

Municipalities in the Tennessee Valley have been warned by the Tennessee Valley Authority that a shortage of power may occur because of demands of defense industries and a rainfall which has been smaller than at any time in 50 years. Last year, the power shortage blacked out theatre signs and front lights. The T.V.A. has three new dams under construction in East Tennessee but these are not to be completed before the year's end.

ARMY PICKS "BOX-OFFICE HITS"

Box-office champions in Army theatres for the month of April, announced this week by R. B. Murray, general manager of the Army Motion Picture Service in Washington, were: "To the Shores of Tripoli," 20th Century-Fox; "The Fleet's In," Paramount; "Courtship of Andy Hardy," MGM; "The Invaders," Columbia; "Jungle Book," United Artists, and "The Male Animal," Warner Bros.

These six outstanding features "from a box office standpoint," according to Mr. Murray, were selected on the basis of the "movie tastes of members of our Armed Forces as reflected by their attendance at War Department Theatres."

Camp Shows Begin Tour

United Service Organization this week inaugurates its summer entertainment program for Army camps, posts and Naval stations, with 15 theatrical presentations, it was announced by the War Department in Washington over the week-end. USO-Camp Shows has set up two circuits. Every camp on each circuit will have a show every three or four weeks, it was reported. Eight of the 15 companies will work the "major" circuit, composed of camps which have stage facilities, and seven will go on the "minor" circuit, consisting of posts where stage trucks will be used.

Two Hollywood units of USO-Camp Shows, "Hollywood Follies" and "On the Loose," began tours of Army camps and Naval bases on the West Coast Wednesday with performances at March Field and Gardner Field, respectively. These shows were produced under USO auspices, with the cooperation of the Hollywood Victory Committee.

Between 200 and 300 actors and actresses will comprise the 15 companies, with guest stars appearing from time to time from the screen, stage and radio.

First of the summer shows, "Full Speed Ahead," got under way last Friday night, at the Norfolk Naval Training Station, Norfolk, Va. Immediately following the opening, USO-Camp Shows began to route out the rest of the revues which will have their premieres between now and June 1st.

Among the new USO presentations, in addition to "Full Speed Ahead," "Hollywood Follies," and "On the Loose," are: "Roxy Theatre Revue," which features a chorus of Gae Foster Girls; "Keep Shufflin'," "Hot from Harlem," two all-Negro musicals; and "The WLS National Barn Dance," one of the hit productions of the National Broadcasting Company.

According to Lawrence Phillips, executive vice-president of USO-Camp Shows, the summertime program will "not stop with these shows. Through our radio, concert, motion picture and band divisions, we shall continue to send volunteer artists directly to the service men as we've done all winter."

Record Grosses Hit by Caravan

Hollywood Victory Caravan, one of the largest charitable ventures ever undertaken by the motion picture industry, wound up its 13-city tour across the country last week, grossing more than $600,000 for the Army and Navy Emergency Relief Fund. In its 13 engagements, the show, produced, directed and performed entirely by screen stars and players, under sponsorship of the Hollywood Victory Committee, averaged $45,000 for each performance. Final gross for all spots was expected to exceed $650,000. In compliance with a request by the Victory Committee, various groups which had planned homecoming ceremonies for the Caravan on its return to Los Angeles last Thursday night, cancelled their welcoming activities.

Allowing for an 18 to 20 per cent overhead, and the Federal 10 per cent gate tax of the intake, the Caravan probably will turn over to Army-Navy relief societies approximately $440,000. A complete report on actual grosses and disbursements was expected from the committee this week.

Gross receipts of the tour were as follows: Chicago, $90,000; Boston, $78,000; Houston, $67,000; Detroit, $53,000; San Francisco approximately $50,000; St. Louis, $41,000; Dallas, $40,000; Minneapolis, $33,750; Philadelphia, $31,500; Cleveland, $31,600; Des Moines, $26,000; St. Paul, $25,500 and Washington, $24,500.

With a cast of 22 stellar Hollywood names and a complete entourage of nearly 100 people, including musicians and stage hands, the Caravan played to capacity audiences at every key city, with heaviest grosses recorded in the middlewest. The show opened April 30th in Washington at Loew's Capitol.

May 13th 1942

I notice copy of memorandum dated May 8th, written by Bob Roddick to all his theatre managers, calling their attention to the "Better Theatres" section of the Motion Picture Herald dated May 2nd, 1942, particularly the items on pages 8,9, and 10 regarding the hazards and precautions to be taken during air raids with special illustrated advice on the proper handling of incendiary bombs.

He also calls attention to pages 17,18,19 and 20 where there is some excellent advice on the conservation of carpet and he suggests that managers who have stairways in their theatres should carefully read the suggestions on the proper fastening of stair carpets to prolong their life.

There is also an article on page 22 on how to get all possible light from carbons and projection equipment and Mr. Roddick suggests that this article be given to the projectionists to read.

From time to time the writer has called your attention to various special articles in the Motion Picture Herald. The information contained in the Herald is compiled by experts who have access to more information than the largest theatre circuit in the world and we expect you to take full advantage of this work and of the investigations made to secure this information.

After you have carefully perused the articles referred to above, will you please give detailed instructions to each of your managers.

SCREEN BRINGS RELIEF FUND, BOND MESSAGES TO MILLIONS

City, Circuit Competitions Spur War Bond Sales at the Nation's Theatres

Theatre decks are cleared for action on the industry War Bond drive.

That's the word this week from the campaign committee of War Activities Committee, under whose auspices, with cooperation of the Treasury Department, 15,000 film houses in the country will work towards raising $100,000,000 in bonds and stamps, beginning with May 30th and through the end of the year. With the Army and Navy Emergency Relief drive ending this Sunday, the nation's motion picture theatres are now concentrating on special promotion and exploitation plans to boost the sale of wartime securities to their 80,000,000 patrons.

Many cities have sent into campaign headquarters outlines of elaborate opening ceremonies, it was reported this week by Si Fabian, campaign director. "This drive," he said, "is one of those things upon which all exhibitors can get together and work as a community unit. Most of the plans revealed to us so far indicate that all exhibitors in a city are working hand in hand, unselfishly. Of course, terrific competition is developing as to which theatres devise ways to sell the most stamps and bonds. That is healthy," Mr. Fabian declared, "and should result in huge sales for the first monthly reports, due June 1st."

Theatre men in at least 100 cities already have arranged for rousing stunts to ballyhoo the drive, including Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Houston, Norfolk, Evansville, Rochester, Baltimore, Reading and Wilmington, the campaign committee reported on Tuesday. In most instances the plans call for participation by civic, military, philanthropic and theatrical figures prominent in the different areas, with additional appearances scheduled, wherever possible, of Hollywood personalities.

Loew's, RKO Set Contests

To stimulate interest in the drive, two contests with prizes totaling $15,000 in War Bonds are being planned by the Loew and RKO circuits in New York. These contests are in line with the Treasury Department's desire to utilize film theatres as a general promotion medium as well as for actual stamp-bond sales in the houses. Last week, posters appeared in RKO theatre lobbies in the New York area announcing "$5,000 in Five $1,000 War Bonds Free." Details were not made available, but it was indicated that all 39 RKO New York houses would participate in this "Buy-a-Bond-Win-a-Bond" competition through June 15th.

Purchasers of war bonds of any denomination, bought anywhere during the month's period, are eligible to compete for a share of the $5,000 in bonds. Each bond must be registered at a local RKO theatre. The drawing will take place at the RKO Albee Theatre on the night of June 16th. Details of the Loew contest are to be announced.

Reports from Nathan Wise, Dayton, Ohio, indicate that that city, America's nerve center of aviation, is going all out in the theatre drive. A rally is set for May 29th, with Buddy Rogers and Patsy Kelly leading a host of screen, stage and radio personalities at the mass meeting planned. Planes will put on an aerial demonstration. Dayton's mayor will head a list of local dignitaries who are expected to participate. The city's newspapers are contributing large display ads for the event, and bond subscriptions will be solicited at the rally.

New York to Stage Huge Rally

Plans to date for New York's "preview" opening of the industry drive were announced this week. A rally platform will be set up in Duffy Square. Leon Leonidoff of Radio City Music Hall will stage a theatrical spectacle for the demonstration, which will include rendition of patriotic songs by the Music Hall's Glee Club. Governor Lehman's proclamation, declaring May 30th "Movie War Stamp and Bond Day," in New York State, will be read, and a banner 10,000 feet square will be hung across Broadway, telling the city's millions that every film theatre has become a War Bond and Stamp agency.

Philadelphia's exhibitors, meanwhile, are aiming to rival New York's celebration to mark the opening of the drive. A "preview" rally will be held on May 28th at Reyburn Plaza. Major Benjamin Ludlow of the Treasury Department, and Ted Schlanger of Warners, who is a member of the motion picture industry committee, will head the speakers.

Springfield, Mass., according to exhibitor reports from that city, is planning a big parade to launch the campaign there. In Baltimore, a state-wide exhibitors' meeting is scheduled for May 26th to discuss plans for the sale of War Bonds and stamps during the drive. Little Rock, Ark., theatre executives met this week for the same purpose. M. S. McCord, secretary-treasurer of Malco Theatres, Inc., was appointed state chairman for the campaign.

Reports from distributors and exhibitors alike on industry efforts to date, independent of the forthcoming campaign to swell America's war chest include the announcement this week from United Artists that more than three-quarters of its exchanges have enrolled 100 per cent in the payroll allotment plan for the sale of bonds and stamps.

DEFENSE THEATRES ON 24-HOUR RUN

Small theatres in the Seattle-Bremerton-Renton defense areas, Washington, are finding 24-hour-daily operation, successful. Theatre attendants call shipyard employees from audiences in time for them to return to work. All theatres in Tacoma report capacity business. The huge influx of defense workers will probably result in more theatre construction.

15,000 Theatres In Drive for Relief Funds

Motion picture theatres numbering close to 15,000 participated in the industry's drive in behalf of Army and Navy Emergency Relief this week. Theatre collections were made at every performance following the showing of the special trailer in which Gary Cooper appealed to millions of film patrons to aid the families of servicemen who required immediate attention.

Ncholas M. Schenck, national chairman for the campaign, announced in New York on Tuesday that the committee had decided to continue the theatre campaign an additional four days, carrying it over the weekend, through Sunday, May 24th. Mr. Schenck said that early reports indicated splendid results from all parts of the country.

In New York, the drive was launched last Thursday at a colorful parade and rally climaxed by the appearance of Lieut. John D. Bulkeley, one of the America's first war heroes, and his shipmates, Lieut. Robert Kelly and Ensign Anthony Akers. Police estimated that approximately 250,000 persons along the line of march thundered a typical New York welcome of ticker tape, confetti and torn telephone books on the procession, which was headed by Max A. Cohen, chairman of the drive; Stanton Griffis, chairman of the Citizens Committee for Navy Relief; Lieut. Col. A. G. Rudd, in charge of Army Relief in the area; Nicholas M. Schenck, national chairman of the industry's Army-Navy Relief campaign, and Harry Brandt, assistant state chairman.

20,000 Hear Mayor, Bulkeley

Following the parade up Seventh Avenue to Times Square, 20,000 persons jammed Times Square to hear Mayor LaGuardia, Lieutenant Bulkeley and Louis Nizer, in addition to a group of entertainers headed by J. C. Flippen, who acted as master of ceremonies. While Billy DeWolfe, Jimmy Dorsey and his orchestra, Hazel Scott, Danny Kaye, Woody Herman and others performed, a collection was taken among the spectators.

Mayor LaGuardia reported that the industry drive got off to a banner start with two donations of $10,000 each from Loew's and Paramount. He also announced that Mr. Schenck and David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of Loew's, each contributed $500.

Chicago is getting ready for a huge Navy Show Benefit, to be given at the Civic Opera House on June 6-7th, with talent for the performance to be drawn from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station and proceeds to go to the Navy Relief Fund. James E. Coston is chairman of ticket sales and William G. Bishop, MGM exploitation man, is publicity chairman. Members of the general committee are Mr. Coston, John Balaban, Edward Silverman and J. E. Flynn.

Mrs. Leonard H. Goldensen, wife of the operating head of Paramount Theatres, was named coordinator between the Navy Relief Society and the committee for the legitimate theatre drive for Army and Navy Emergency Relief.

AAA Credits Films for Arbitration Expansion

Film Industry Praised for Making Tribunals Available for Use

The American Arbitration Association in its annual report on labor and industrial arbitration released this week paid special tribute to the motion picture distributors for their cooperation in making the 31 regional tribunals of the Motion Picture Arbitration system available for the settlement of industrial and labor disputes.

The report gave credit to the motion picture industry for making possible much of the wartime expansion of arbitration. Noting that in the first three months of 1942 the number of labor disputes submitted to the association increased 106 per cent the report said that the use of the motion picture tribunals in 31 exchange cities, near many important war manufacturing areas, had made possible the speedy settlement of numerous cases.

Until 1941 the labor and industrial arbitration activities of the American Arbitration Association were all carried on at long range from the New York office of the AAA, the report said.

War Brought Expansion

"'Full speed ahead' to the Association's war arbitration activities was signalled early last year, when arbitration centers for both commercial and industrial arbitrations were established in thirty key cities. This expansion was possible through the generous cooperation of the motion picture producers, with the approval of the Department of Justice, in placing at the disposal of the Association the facilities of the Motion Picture Arbitration System. Without this cooperation the Industrial Arbitration Tribunal could not have rendered the widespread service which this report records."

While half of the fees charged by the Association for industrial cases heard in film tribunals is allocated to the general fund of the Motion Picture Arbitration association a spokesman for the AAA indicated that such payment during the year had been "negligible, scarcely more than a token." Although a substantial number of industrial disputes have used the hearing rooms and clerks of the motion picture system it was pointed out that arbitration is conducted by the AAA on a non-profit basis. A fee of $15 is charged for the first industrial hearing, and $10 for each subsequent session. Arbitrators serve without pay and most cases are settled in one hearing.

Cleveland

A specific run complaint by an Akron theatre, filed on March 14th, brought the Cleveland tribunal its fourth case. The Liberty Operating Company, owner of the Liberty, in Akron, named MGM, Paramount, Warners and 20th Century-Fox in its Section X demand.

The theatre charges that it enjoyed first run of those companies in the West Hill section of Akron until 1938. In that year, it is asserted, the Highland Theatre, a circuit house was opened and obtained the run. The complaint asks return of the run to the Liberty.

New York

The 20th New York case, a clearance demand against all Five by the Rome theatre, Pleasantville, N. Y., was withdrawn on Thursday by Phillips-Sussman, Inc., operators of the theatre. The complaint which had sought reduction of the 7-day margin held by White Plains first runs was settled by agreement, subsequent to hearing.

Chicago

A Chicago suburban theatre, the York, in Elmhurst, Ill., sought through counsel this week to reopen the 13th case, in which Thomas C. McConnell last week granted a reduction from 5 weeks to 24 hours to the Wheaton theatre, Wheaton, Ill. The York, an intervenor, petitioned the tribunal for a reopening of the case. Mr. McConnell's decision was interpreted in the Chicago trade as completely upsetting the area's elaborate zone clearance by shifting the suburban Wheaton from Chicago Loop clearance to rural Aurora, Ill. The grounds on which the York sought to reopen the award were not immediately clear, and Chicago observers expressed the belief that the theatre's only recourse was an appeal.

The Warner Circuit has intervened in Chicago's 17th case, the clearance complaint of the Palace theatre, Gary, Ind.

Hearings on Case No. 16, the clearance complaint of the Times theatre Danville were continued until May 20th.

The Annetta theatre, Cicero, complaint will be heard June 5th.

Detroit

At Detroit an arbitration action was heard for the first time without benefit of legal counsel last week when J. A. Vance, arbitrator, opened hearings on the clearance action of Don Gregory, for his Crystal theatre in Beulah, Mich. Raymond Moon, general manager of Mutual theatres appeared for Mr. Gregory. Managers or salesmen appeared for four of the defendant distributors, while 20th Century-Fox did not appear. Ashman Brothers Garden Theatre, Frankfort, is an interested party.

St. Louis

Adolph Rosecan, owner of the Princess, South St. Louis subsequent run house, last week testified he had to wait as long as three months for pictures as hearing on his clearance complaint against Warners, Fox, Paramount and RKO opened. Mr. Rosecan contended he had to wait 14 days behind the Gravois, St. Louis Amusement Company house, and a like number of days after the Cinderella, part of the Wehrenberg-Kaimann chain, and these two houses played films at different times, making it "impossible for me to get pictures sometimes." Both the circuits have intervened in the hearing. The hearing was resumed on Wednesday.

An unusually large number of independent exhibitors filled the St.. Louis hearing room to overflow. The case is regarded as an important test between circuit and independents in the city.

Reelected to Jewish Post

Morris Wolf, Warner attorney in Philadelphia, has been reelected honorary president of the Allied Jewish Appeal in that city.

Heads Episcopal Actors

Vinton Freedley, theatrical producer, has been elected president of the Episcopal Actors Guild, succeeding the late Otis Skinner.

TEXAS THEATRE OWNERS INDEPENDENT UNIT

TO THE EDITOR:

The Texas Theatre Owners, Inc., is still being publicized in the Trade Press as being an affiliate of the Motion Picture Owners of America.

When former Texas Theatre Owners Protective Association was reorganized last December and changed its title to the present one, it was decided by the Directors of the Organization that it would be an independent Texas unit, affiliate with no National organization, but ready at any and all times to lend its aid and support to any National movement deemed best for our industry.

We did our best to be of assistance in the recent UMPI work on the Consent Decree revision and gave our endorsement to the splendid work of the United Motion Picture Industry.

We will appreciate your noting the above and recognizing the fact that this is an independent State organization.—HENRY REEVE, President Texas Theatre Owners, Inc.

Drop Sunday Shows Ban

After a third jury trial resulted in a "not guilty" verdict for Henry Seel, manager of the Paramount theatre at Jackson, Miss., arrested and fined $50 on each of five successive weeks for operating his show on Sundays, Jackson city officials announced that as far as they were concerned the state's 120-year-old Sunday show ban was terminated. Police of Jackson will no longer interfere with Sunday shows, Mayor Walter A. Scott said. "Since we have had no support or encouragement from the public generally and none from the appeal court, shows can operate on Sundays," he added. Within a few hours after this announcement, operators of theatres at Meridian, Miss., said they would attempt to resist the Mississippi law.

Counsel for Mr. Seel contended that since baseball and other businesses prohibited also by the Sabbath law, operated under the old statutes his client "was being discriminated against." He cited a California supreme court decision in a case in that state which held that laws applying to an entire class of business might not be enforced against some individuals within the class if they were not enforced against all.

Mr. Seel did not contest the city evidence at the trial that he opened his theatre on Sundays for five straight weeks and in turn the city did not deny that stores selling all kinds of merchandise, baseball games, ice cream parlors and other business were allowed to operate on Sunday although all were also covered by the statutes.

Acquittal of Mr. Seel ended a long fight in the recent session of the Legislature where a bill repealing the law passed in 1822 was defeated in the House after winning a Senate approval. The Jackson Daily News strongly fought the law since Mr. Seel's arrest.

Shows have for many years disregarded the Sunday closing along the Gulf Coast and in the Delta areas of the state.

No Publicity for Publicists

The activities of the eastern branch of the MPPDA's Public Relations Committee will be conducted without publicity. Although the committee, composed of the publicity directors of all major distributors, has worked out a "well formulated" plan for a general program of institutional public relations it will not release it for publication.

Glen Allvine, executive secretary, said this week that news of the committee's work would be released as each of the dozen or more points on the initial agenda reached accomplishment.

The committee was scheduled to meet on Thursday at its offices at 28 West 44th St., New York, to approve the outline of the long range public relations program which it contemplates. Mort Blumenstock, of Warners, and a drafting committee prepared the plan, which reportedly embraces approximately a dozen major proposals.

Charles Francis Coe, assistant to Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA and new counsel for the organization, sat in on the meetings of the publicity group. He has reportedly placed full approval of the parent organization on their intentions of remedying "public misconceptions" of the motion picture industry.

The MPPDA foreign publicity managers committee this week heard a report that newspapers and magazines in neutral and United Nations countries were devoting as much space in wartime to news of Hollywood and the American screen as they did in peace.

Samuel Cohen, United Artists member of the International Film Relations Committee, told the meeting that the report was based on a six month survey of approximately 400 newspapers and magazines in Central and South America, Great Britain, Sweden, Switzerland, Portugal, Turkey, Egypt, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India. Even in Axis dominated areas American film news is still a matter of keen public interest, he reported.

Despite reduced publication sizes American films and players still command a high proportion of space. Where the item has a war tie-in it is invariably front page copy, he said.

Labels to expedite international shipment of newsreels were also approved by the foreign publicity committee. Henceforth newsreel cans will bear a red, white and blue eagle design with the legend "USA Newsreel—Valueless if Delayed."

The board of directors of the MPPDA will hold their quarterly meeting in New York on June 9th.

Open 'Network Of Americas'

The Columbia Broadcasting System on Tuesday opened on full schedule its new Latin American network of 76 stations, known as "Cadena de las Americas"—network of the Americas. It is estimated that the three CBS transmitters cost about $600,000 and to program and operate the network for a year costs about $700,000.

Under the terms of the contract between the network and its affiliates, CBS undertakes to feed a minimum of 20 hours weekly by short wave to the stations south of the Rio Grande and affiliates undertake to re-broadcast a minimum of one hour of the CBS programs daily.

Actually, CBS is transmitting programs on a daily schedule from 4 to 11 p.m. and is adding time when the occasion warrants. Although the network is planned for commercial operation, there are no sponsors as yet and CBS has issued no rate card.

Speeches by Vice-President Henry A. Wallace in Spanish and by Latin American heads of state featured the dedication.

New NAB Board Holds Meeting

The twentieth annual convention of the National Association of Broadcasters was held in Cleveland last week. The meeting formally closed with the new board of directors convening. Six directors-at-large to serve for one year were elected. They were:

Large stations: J. O. Maland, WHO, Des Moines; Edwin W. Craig, WSM, Nashville. Medium stations: Don S. Elias, WWNC, Asheville, N. C.; Eugene P. O'Fallon, KFEL, Denver. Small stations: James W. Woodruff, Jr., WHBL, Columbus, Ga.; Herbert Hollister, KANS, Wichita, Kan.

The Columbia Broadcasting System accepted active membership on the board, as provided in a convention resolution, and named Paul Kesten, CBS vice-president, to serve on the board.

Arthur Simon, general manager of WPEN, Philadelphia, was elected chairman of a committee to enforce a code for foreign language broadcasts. The code, to be presented soon for adoption by all stations having foreign language programs, provides for fingerprinting and registering some 5,000 announcers, musicians and others.

At the closing NAB sessions discussions centered around priorities, which, it was feared, would seriously affect many small stations. The possibility that the Federal Communications Commission might order half the nation's 800 stations off the air to conserve equipment for the clear channel stations was an unexpected issue which concerned managers of smaller-power stations.

More than 100 representatives of the network affiliates have met under W. J. Scripps, head of WWJ, Detroit, but beyond agreeing to strengthen their organization, Network Affiliates, Inc., to combat such a move, no definite plan was formulated because of the uncertainty of the Government program.

Hit Drive Against Film Parkers

The unfairness of issuing summons to motorists who park longer than one hour while they attend a neighborhood film house was commented upon editorially this week by the Springfield Morning Union. The Springfield, Mass., police department, under a recently appointed chief of police, has started a vigorous drive on parkers. The editorial follows in part:

"Lack of public parking lots within easy walking distance of several neighborhood motion picture theatres presents a problem in connection with the intensified police crusade to bring overtime parkers to book. In the evening the condition causes no hardship because the parking restrictions usually end before the hour when evening performances usually begin. But the car owner who attends an afternoon show and a few days later receives by mail a summons is likely, with reason, to reach the conclusion that his recreation has been costly. . . .

"One remedy and the only one that comes to mind, would be to extend the limit allowed for legal parking near the neighborhood theatres."

Sound Subject to Museum

IN BRITISH STUDIOS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN

in London

Comedy Blind Spot

War at home and abroad, political and military, in the air and under the sea, still continues to occupy the attentions of the great bulk of British producers. War films, too, provided they be possessed of the requisite entertainment value, and not merely on the grounds that they are war films, continue to score at the British box office, the documentary, whether dramatized documentary or documentary pure and simple, registering more consistently than any other variety. War as an inspiration for comedy has not, it would seem, proven a fitting vehicle for the talents of British producers and directors. More than one British comedy with a wartime flavoring has been a flop.

The majority of Britain's super war films have so far succeeded in securing and deserving West End spots. British National's "One of Our Aircraft Is Missing," Michael Powell's drama which documents the subject matter of British airmen grounded in friendly territory is registering business at the Leicester Square Odeon which must justify the producers' faith in a war subject. Paul Soskin's "The Day Will Dawn," a dramatization of the spirit of Norway, has gone to General Films' shop window, the Leicester Square Theatre. At the London Pavilion the superlative "The Foreman Went to France," which United Artists have sponsored here, is grossing what must be record money for the house.

It cannot be wondered at then, that the current pattern of British production wears a wartime air, that submarine warfare, the drama of the Navy, E boats, tankers, the philosophies of war should be the inspiration for those films currently on the floor.

Withal there remain producers who still lean towards other than war subjects, whose inclination is towards escapism rather than realism. Paul Soskin, to whose credit have been some of the most entertaining and commercially successful comedies to have been made in Britain, has just concluded the film referred to above, "The Day Will Dawn." He intends going back to comedy for his next picture, due to be made under the Gainsborough Gaumont British banner, "Quiet Christening."

British National, producers of the extremely creditable, "One of Our Aircraft," are not confining their attentions to realist drama. They have made comedies in the recent past and will continue to do so. Two, a Flanagan and Allen comedy, and one with comedian Max Miller, are dated for immediate production. Two Cities, producers of the Noel Coward naval epic, have comedies with no warlike flavor on the tapis.

The Denham Navy

A distinctly Naval flavor still clings to the Denham Studios where Noel Coward—still ahead of schedule—continues work on "In Which We Serve." The full scale replica of the Destroyer "Torrin," apple of Two Cities' eye, and envy of more than one other production outfit, magnet for the personal interest and inspection of the Royal Family having been damaged realistically by studio torpedoes, and having limped fictitiously to port, now passes into the plane of retrospective comment and reminiscence, and shooting has begun on more homely dry land sequences.

Two Naval Subjects

Two new naval subjects—one dealing with the Royal Navy; the other with the Merchant Navy—are announced for early production by Ealing Studios. They are to be made by Michael Balcon, and both will be directed by ex-cutter Charles Frend, director of "The Big Blockade" and "The Foreman Went to France."

The Royal Navy subject will be a story of "E-boat Alley," with that title, dealing with the work of the small ships and motor boats patrolling that stretch of water between Sheringham and Yarmouth, which, being nearest to the Dutch coast, is usually chosen by the Germans for E-boat attacks.

The Merchant Navy story will be a film adaptation of the epic adventure of the oil tanker San Demetrio, which was shelled and set on fire in the Jarvis Bay convoy. The crew abandoned ship, but the men in one of the boats went back on board, succeeded in putting the fires out, and brought the tanker home successfully.

"San Demetrio" is being written by Charles Frend and associate producer Robert Hamer, who are working in close cooperation with a number of the men who were actually on the tanker.

Currently Ealing have a paratroop subject on the floor, titled "They Came in Khaki," and dealing with a supposed attack on Britain by Nazi parachute troops. Cavalcanti directs, from an original story by Graham Greene. The canvas against which the drama unfolds is one of rustic England, and already an Olde Worlde village complete with Elizabethan church has been constructed in one of the Ealing stages.

The cast is a useful one by British standards and includes Frank Lawton, Elizabeth Allen, Leslie Banks, Basil Sydney, Marie Lohr, and Valerie Taylor.

Undersea Adventure

Another branch of naval activity, the submarine service, is the background and inspiration of Gainsborough's "We Dive at Dawn," which Anthony Asquith is directing at Shepherds Bush, with Eric Portman and John Mills heading the cast.

Technically and scenically, "We Dive at Dawn" will be one of the most ambitious of Edward Black's productions for Gainsborough. The characters are the crew of a British submarine, the "Sea Tiger," the background is the interior of their craft: the action is laid in the North Sea and the Baltic. A full-sized replica of a modern submarine is under construction at Shepherd's Bush, close-packed with a mass of machinery, all working features of which will have to be learned by the actors who form the ship's crew. The M.O.I. and the Services are providing all possible facilities, both in studio production and exteriors.

John Mills, hot from work on the Coward film as a mere lower-deck rating, plays the submarine captain who brings his ship home after an uneventful trip. Dispersed throughout Britain on 7 days' leave, his crew are suddenly recalled within 24 hours. A wedding, a courtship, a romantic date, an attempted re-union with a dissatisfied wife, all these are cancelled as the crew return and take to sea again on the most dangerous mission of their lives, the interception of the new Nazi battleship "Brandenburg" on its way to the Kiel Canal.

Eric Portman plays Leading Seaman Hobson, the unhappily-married man, who finally saves the lives of his captain and crew after their adventures have landed them nearly in disaster. The cast includes Niall McGuinnis, Reginald Purdell.

National Resumes

After a Spring break, British National starts active production once more with John Baxter taking the floor at Rock Studios and Leslie and Elizabeth Hiscott moving into Hammersmith to make "Lady from Lisbon" on May 11. Baxter starts work on the Flanagan and Allen comedy, "Three's a Crowd."

Baxter is also actively concerned with the preliminary preparations for George Blake's "The Shipbuilders," a story of Clydeside, and one of the big subjects on British National's schedule, which should be into production after Baxter finishes J. B. Priestly's "When We Are Married," due for filming in the autumn.

"Rose of Tralee"

Less challenging in its title, less ambitious maybe in its scope, Butcher's "Rose of Tralee," sponsored by a company which seldom if ever launches a losing venture, is also concerned with the war. Into its superficially peaceful frame has been introduced the Blitz on London, and the B. B. C. in full wartime fling. The homely flavor of the piece can be gauged from the story which reaches its climax when the hero—John Longden—comes back to London to find his wife missing after the bombing, but to discover her one night when he hears her, over the B. B. C. network—singing "Rose of Tralee."

BRITISH LABOR MOVES FOR 'STATE GUARDIANSHIP'

Technicians Urge Public Control; Ask Voice in Industry Management

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Labor in the British motion picture industry, capitalizing on its wartime gains, is proposing a "rationalization" plan for substitution of public control or state guardianship for "monopoly control" of the industry. Included are proposals for coordination of the war effort, for round table discussions of industry problems which would give labor a voice in management, and for closer study of production essentials.

The new role was made manifest at the recent annual convention of the Association of Cine Technicians, official labor body covering skilled employees of British studios.

Two particular objectives aimed at have the weight, not merely a numerical weight, of the more enlightened technicians behind them. These are:

(1) A practical "rationalization" plan for the industry based upon a full use of all brains within the industry, on both sides of the employers' table, and a keener attention to production essentials.

(2) A new, more vigorous and concrete propaganda policy on the part of the Government.

Both these objectives were discussed exhaustively, and without any particular sectional bias, at the annual conference last week. Both will be promulgated continuously by the Association.

That the British technicians these days are thinking further afield than merely sectional and material improvement was epitomized by Anthony Asquith, whose presidential address to the rank and file was greatly an urgent and considered plea for a more vital and aggressive policy in regard to film propaganda on the part of the Government. He called likewise for a more international outlook and for co-relation of the energies and output of American, Soviet, Chinese and British industries.

Permanent Consultation Plan Advanced

The plan is essentially that which was reported in Motion Picture Herald last February. It has been developed beyond its original form and now embraces four cardinal points:

First of these is the essential and vital part which the industry must and can play in the achievement of victory.

Secondly and more controversially, the assumption that monopoly trustification of the industry is not in the public interest.

Thirdly, its replacement by some form of public control.

Fourthly, and whilst the least controversial probably the most constructive, the principle that whatever control shall be of the industry it should exist on the basis of permanent consultation through central and local industrial committees on all questions of wartime efficiency and planning.

This program, which applies more directly to the wartime situation is, of course, greatly inspired by certain moves within the industry since the war which have provoked the fear, not only within labor circles, that the industry is moving itself towards the control of one single financial interest.

State Guardianship Proposal Seen

Ultimately, it would seem, the Technicians would aim at some form of public control, not necessarily nationalization, but rather a form of State guardianship. The immediate concern, however, is apparently less sectional than that and is the operation of the industry at its most efficient and highest scale in the interests of the war.

The plan itself was outlined in a memorandum issued by the Association in January this year. It was keenly critical of current conditions, no less so of the Government's incursions into the industry, and was based fundamentally upon "the elimination of friction by the full recognition of trades unions and the negotiations by them of proper agreements on wages and conditions."

Constructive Criticism On Practices Offered

Though critical of conditions in the industry and Government departments, conditions which, to a great extent, it was suggested, have given rise to the current slump state of affairs, the memorandum exposing it was more constructive than destructive.

It pleaded for the co-ordination of all Government departments interested in films, for long term policies, both as regards manpower and the films to be made, went into great and elaborate detail on inefficiency within the studios, pointed out the need for such things as rehearsals, restriction of sets to reasonable limits, studies of the problem of floor space, exchange of sets, pooling all idle equipment and essentially the establishment of production committees representing not only the procedure but the technicians engaged on the films, such committees to be local or unit committees with a central committee representing them all.

Opposition from Employers, Producers

The plan has been cold-shouldered by the British Film Producers' Association, representing the employers and producers. They contend that the Technicians have no right to tell them how to improve their business.

To this the Association replies that in wartime the motion picture business is the nation's business, that any industry which is not run properly today should be taken out of the owners' hands so that it is run properly.

Meanwhile, at least one production unit, Charter Films, operating at Denham and producing "Thunder Rock" for Metro, has taken the first steps towards the setting up of such a production committee, composed jointly of the company, as producers, and the technicians and workers engaged on the film. It is believed that The Two Cities Film Company, for which Noel Coward is currently producing "In Which We Serve," is also sympathetic towards the principle.

New Attitude on Propaganda Asked

Determined likewise that the Government's policy on propaganda by means of the film leaves much to be desired, the Technicians' Association has voiced the need for a new attitude towards motion picture propaganda. To quote Ralph Bond, one of the active personalities in the wartime documentary movement:

"Films which are particularly needed today sort themselves into four groups:

(1) Films dealing with the military position and economic resources of the enemy.

(2) With the strategy of the war on all its fronts.

(3) With the home front needs of manpower and industrial distribution problems, and industry and training films on guerrilla fighting, street warfare, etc.

(4) Inter-Allied films aimed at helping the different countries represented by the United Nations to solve their common problems."

Propaganda Film Policy Attacked

The Association's January memorandum sharply criticized the Government's international progaganda policy and at the recent Conference the failure of the Government and the M.O.I. to initiate any positive long term policy in terms of propaganda was once again attacked. It was charged that English propaganda was completely out of touch with the people, that it lacked aggressiveness and urgency when compared with the propaganda of other United Nations.

The situation was epitomized by President Anthony Asquith, who expressed his opinion on the role of films in the international scenes, particularly as a force for greater cooperation between allied countries.

"Let us hope that the American, Soviet, Chinese, British and other allied industries can so co-relate their energies and output as to play a vitally important part in the course and final outcome of the war, and that when the war is over this co-operation can play an equally important part in shaping a just and lasting peace."

Mr. Asquith was thinking further ahead even than today. He hoped that the Government, which has appreciated what films can do for the war effort, would realize how they could help in the change over from war to peace.

"If films can teach us to be good soldiers why should they not be equally capable of teaching us to be good citizens?" he queried.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The American Arbitration Association, of which motion picture trade arguments are now such an integral part, had a most unusual beginning.

A law suit he was ashamed of winning caused Moses H. Grossman, lawyer, to start the association, 20 years ago, in New York. He told about it the other day, on the 20th anniversary of the AAA.

The case involved an East Side merchant who pushed a woman from his store. She was injured and sued for $50,000 damages. Mr. Grossman was counsel for the storekeeper.

"I had no case, really, and offered no witnesses," Mr. Grossman recalled today. "I knew the lower East Side, though, and I saw that the woman's witnesses, all friends or relatives, were overzealous.

"The truth would have won for them, but they embroidered on it and I tore them apart on cross-examination. The jury denied her a verdict."

Mr. Grossman, however, persuaded his client to give her $5,000.

A few years later, when Presiding Justice Victor J. Dowling of the Appellate Division, appealed for help in speeding the wheels of justice, Mr. Grossman came forward with his plan whereby prominent men serve as arbitrators and reach in a few days decisions in cases that might take months in the courts.

But they decided they wouldn't change the title, will let it ride as just plain Sergeant York. The Sergeant will understand.

Another advantage McLaglen claims is tremendous cross-fire obtained from the positioning of its numerous guns.

Veteran of the Boer and the last World War, McLaglen drew largely upon his own combat background for his ideas on tank development. In his tank, the movement of the gun turrets may be controlled either by the individual gunner or by the tank's operator.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

Esteemed Editor:

No doubt you'll have gleaned before now, from the reportings of the syndicated columnists and the Hollywood correspondents of metropolitan newspapers, that the first of the Academy-sponsored previewings of short subjects was a success of major proportions.

Magazine writers, delayed by longer deadlines, will be telling their readers about it a little later on.

Audience response to the program was such as showmen dream about but seldom experience, although there's no law against their doing for their customers about what the Short Subjects Branch of the Academy did for their guests, and foyer comment of the capacity turnout was something indeed to hear, for few of the press people had had so much as an inkling that the Town was producing short product in anything like the quantiy and quality witnessed.

The program consisted of 10 shorts, projected in unbroken succession, for 113 minutes.

They were:

Setting the Pace, 20th Century-Fox Sports Review, 10 min.
Mr. Strauss Takes a Walk, Paramount Puppetoon, 8 min.
Tireman Spare My Tires, Columbia comedy, 14 min.
Dog Trouble, MGM Technicolor cartoon, 8 min.
Popular Science, Paramount Magnacolor subject, 10 min.
Army Mascot, RKO-Radio Disney Technicolor cartoon, 7 min.
Spanish Fiesta, Warner Technicolor Ballet de Monte Carlo, 19 min.
Gateway to Asia, 20th-Fox Magic Carpet, 9 min.
Barbee-Cues, MGM Pete Smith Specialty, 10 min.
India in Crisis, RKO-Radio March of Time, 18 min.

The next previewing of shorts is scheduled for June 10th and up to now there are no plannings for screenings in other cities.

That appears at this point to be the single flaw in the success of a project high of purpose and rich in promise.

The Hollywood Victory Caravan is back home, with the Army and Navy Relief Funds replenished to the extent of some $650,000 by its performances, and this traditionally talkative town finds itself approximately speechless in its admiration of the project and the personnel.

Traditionally temperamental, too, the Townsfolk are telling each other in wonderment that no comparable aggregation of top-bill talent ever managed before to eat, live and work together for a fraction of the total elapsed time without getting in each other's hair and pulling some of it out.

Also traditionally a Town addicted to spelling success with dollar signs, the populace is respectfully aghast at the take rolled up in the course of the expedition.

PRODUCTION REBOUND

Foretellings of a lull in production due to this, that or another reason, mostly war-born and all hypothetical, dimmed out at end of a week which witnessed the starting of 19 pictures and the finishing of but 6 to lift the total of pictures in shooting stage from 36 to 49.

Activity represented by the above statistics was evenly spread over the community.

Coherence is not yet, but there's nary a citizen hereabouts who isn't proud of what's been done and all out for the getting done of more of the same.

Nor is the excitement merely local, if a letter from G. Ralph Branton, general manager of the Tri-States Theatre Corporation, Des Moines, to the Hollywood Victory Committee may be regarded as indicative. One paragraph of its reads:

"I want you to know that everyone in the State of Iowa, from the Governor down to myself, the committee man, worships at the shrine of these people who so nobly gave their valuable time and presented this most outstanding of all entertainments of all time. Unless you could be present to feel the great reception they received you would not believe how the people love them, how the people appreciated every word that was said and every bit of business that was done. When Iowa people pay $27.50, $16.50 and $11 for seats, and cheer at the end of the performance, it is a sign that it was truly great."

There was of course at no time any question about the success of the Victory Caravan.

It had too much talent and too high purpose to flop.

But nobody expected it to throw its Home Town into a dither.

That unexpected after-effect puts the project down in the record books as an all time high in a special variety of entertainment achievement.

National Film Library Plan Confirmed

The Library of Congress in Washington, of which Archibald MacLeish, director of the Office of Facts and Figures, is Librarian, officially confirmed on Monday appointment of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library in New York as its agent in selecting the best of Hollywood's motion pictures for permanent preservation. As reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of May 16th, the Library has designated the Museum to "review and index new film and make recommendations to the Librarian towards his ultimate selection."

According to the Library of Congress announcement, the Library, "heretofore, although entitled under the Copyright Act to receive copies of motion picture films deposited for copyright, has been unable to select and keep film because of the lack of suitable storage facilities. The new arrangement, which will gradually build up in the national library a collection of the most important films produced by the American motion picture industry, has been made possible by the generosity of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Museum of Modern Art."

Mr. MacLeish declared the films "would be, in essence, a first-hand record of American history and would keep alive for posterity the changing aspect of the American scene."

Whitney Statement Praises Iris Barry

John Hay Whitney, president of the Museum and of its Film Library, and director of the Motion Picture Division of the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, in announcing the appointment, paid tribute to Iris Barry, Curator of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library. Mr. Whitney commended Miss Barry for "the tireless devotion and the imagination with which she has worked for the recognition of motion pictures as a real force in our present society and as a great and living art."

The work of reviewing all the new films will be carried out by a special staff under Miss Barry's direction and will include: Margaret Jones and Barbara Symmes, film analysts and reviewers; Norbert Lusk, former New York film critic of the Los Angeles Times, who was for many years editor of Picture Play; and Philip Hartung, until recently film critic of The Commonweal.

More than 17,000,000 feet of film is contained in the Museum's Film Library collection, containing virtually all pictures of historic importance produced in the United States and abroad from 1895 to 1935.

According to the announcement from the Library of Congress, "it is impossible to estimate in advance how many films the Library will select for preservation. During the year 1940-41, 3,509 motion pictures, or approximately 28,000 reels, were copyrighted. The Library will attempt to select for preservation only those films which may reasonably be expected to interest students."

In the Library's vault in Washington, copyright deposit copies of early film dating from 1912 have been stored.

Trade Shows Sparsely Attended Due to Conflicting Dates: Kirsch

Chicago Bureau

"As long as the distributors persist in arranging trade showing dates that conflict with each other they can expect but sparse attendance and have only themselves to blame," was the opinion expressed recently by Jack Kirsch, president of the Allied Theatres of Illinois, following trade showings arranged by Paramount and RKO on the same days. This lack of consideration for the exhibitors, many of whom faithfully attend all the showings, should be remedied, he thinks.

"Last November I called this condition to the attention of the distributors but only MGM cooperated and made any effort to arrange their dates for the convenience of the exhibitor," he said.

Mr. Kirsch's letter to the distributors said:

"It has been called to my attention that the present form of trade showings in the Chicago area is very complicated and inconveniently adapted to the time of the majority of exhibitors. It is evident that when setting up the trade showings the consenting distributors do not consult one another as to the dates designated, thus causing two and sometimes three screenings to be scheduled for the same hours on the same days.

"As an exhibitor leader, if I am in order, I would like to suggest to the five consenting distributors that each distributor select one day of the week which is to be designated as their trade showing day, in order that the problem of overlapping screenings be overcome. It would, I believe, be very simple for the consenting distributors to hold a meeting and agree upon the screening day mutually convenient for them.

"It is also my suggestion and recommendation that morning showings be eliminated entirely. When pictures are shown in the morning and afternoon of the same day it becomes impossible for the exhibitor to carry on any normal routine of business on that day. For example, a picture screened at 10:00 a.m. would be over at approximately noon. Between the hours of 12:00 noon and 2:00 p.m. exchange employees are out to lunch. Therefore, when a second picture is scheduled for 2:00 p.m. of the same day, it is readily understandable that exhibitors are unable to transact any business on that day. It is my suggestion that screenings start uniformly at 1:00 p.m. with not more than two pictures shown on any particular day, thus giving the exhibitor the opportunity of transacting his business in the morning."

RKO Home Office, Studio Golfers Compete by Wire

RKO Radio's War Bond Golf Tournament was held Wednesday at the Westchester Country Club, Rye, N. Y., with the home office and studio golfers on the coast having a hole by hole duel by wire. For the New Yorkers the team was lined up as follows: Ned E. Depinet, A. W. Smith, Jr., Senator J. Henry Walters, Harry Michalson, Robert Wolff, Harry Pimstein and Lou Miller. It was rumored that the eighth golfer for the home office would be Byron Nelson, professional, who has just completed a golf short for RKO Pathe.

N. Y. Censors Again Reject "Outlaw"

For the second time in four months, the New York State Board of Regents refused last Friday to pass Howard Hughes' production, "The Outlaw." Irwin Esmond, director of the motion picture division of the State Education Department, refused a license for the film in January on the ground that scenes and dialogue were "immoral and indecent."

At the Hays office this week, it was learned that early this winter there was much discussion concerning the picture and that finally, it was agreed that a Production Code seal would be issued for "The Outlaw" after certain required deletions were made. The Hughes office was informed that a PCA certificate would be made out on that basis. Whether or not the producer made the necessary deletions was not disclosed.

Halifax Trailer Launches UA's Navy Picture

Viscount Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, in a specially prepared screen appearance made in Washington over the weekend, spoke from the screen Tuesday night at the Normandie Theatre, New York, at the private premiere of "Ships With Wings," the new United Artists release. The picture was scheduled to have its regular opening at the Rivoli Theatre this Saturday, May 23rd. Its premiere was sponsored by the Union Jack Club and the event was characterized "a gesture of appreciation" by Sir William Wiseman, club founder. British War Relief Society and the English Speaking Union were joint sponsors with the club.

In his screen address, Viscount Halifax expressed gratitude to the American people "for all the help they have given so freely to my people during the last 30 months. Since Pearl Harbor," he said, "our two nations have been partners in every sense."

The Ambassador declared that "Mr. Churchill has told you officially of the way we feel about what the United States is doing in this struggle for liberty, but those of us who live and work here may add a more personal word of thanks." The Viscount described "Ships With Wings" as a "British sailors' film," and added, "I am glad, therefore, that tonight it is the Royal Navy that has the opportunity of saying 'thank you' for us all."

British seamen currently in New York were ticket-takers, program sellers and ushers at the Normandie showing which was held by British societies in appreciation of the aid given officers and men of the British Navy by various American organizations. Much of the action of the picture was photographed aboard the aircraft-carrier "Ark Royal."

EAGLE SQUADRON

SMPE Studies Wartime Safety, Conservation

Wartime measures for theatre managements and projectionists drew the attention of the Atlantic Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, meeting at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York Thursday evening. The regular monthly session of the group was turned into a patriotic gathering to promote conservation and safety in the theatre, with a number of guests invited from among persons prominent in such activities.

The principal paper of the meeting, which was presided over by Dr. Alfred W. Goldsmith, chairman of the Atlantic Coast Section and also of the Theatre Engineering Committee, dealt with conservation of projection equipment and supplies. Prepared as a report of the Projection Practice Subcommittee, of which Charles Horstman, projection supervisor of RKO Theatres is chairman, this paper presented reasons for and methods of promoting cleanliness, maintaining lubrication, effecting economy in replacements and in the use of carbons, servicing equipment, and the handling of all apparatus so as to conserve its usefulness.

Committee Prepares Paper

The paper had been prepared by eight members of the Projection Practice Subcommittee as an elaboration of the "ten points" recently issued by Richard Walsh, president of the IATSE & MPMO, and each read the portion that he had written. These members were:

J. J. Hopkins, M. Gessin, John J Sefing, E. R. Geib, Henry Behr, Mr. Horstman, Adolph Goodman and E. R. Morin.

In the second paper of the evening Henry Anderson of Paramount Pictures described procedure devised for Paramount and allied theatres for the protection of patrons and property during blackouts and air raids.

Among the invited guests were:

Francis S. Harmon, executive vice chairman of the War Activities Committee; International Representative, Joe D. Basson, IA international representative and former president of Local 306, personally representing Richard F. Walsh, president of the IA; Arthur S. Dickinson and David Palfreyman, representing Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; James D. Lynett, supervising chief inspector of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity Department of the City of New York; Nathan D. Golden, chief of Service Industries Staff, U. S. Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; and Lester B. Isaac, director of sound and visual projection, Loew's, Inc.

General arrangements and press contacts were in charge of P. A. McGuire, advertising and publicity manager of International Projector Corp.

(The Projection Practice Subcommittee paper, entitled "Wartime Conservation in Theatre Projection," will be published in the May 30th issue of Better Theatres).

Revise Admission Scale

Loew's in St. Louis has revised its admission scale to 30, 40 and 50 cents, taxes included, through the week, and 30, 40 and 55 cents on weekends.

National Theatre Supply Offers New Budget Plan

A new budget plan for major repairs on projection equipment has been announced by National Theatre Supply Company. The plan is being offered to exhibitors by all the 28 branches of National and it will include the repair of projector mechanisms, the repair of lamphouses, the repair of magazines, regrinding and surface-treating of projection lenses, replacement of motion picture screens, purchase of booth accessories including lubricants, fire protection supplies and spare vacuum tubes. According to the company, the plan offers exhibitors convenient weekly or monthly terms after a nominal down payment, and that payment may be spread over a period of one year.

National Theatre Supply also announces a new synthetic plastic coating for glass, known as Hamlin Shatter Resistant Film. It is designed, according to the company, to eliminate the danger of injury and even fatalities to theatre patrons and personnel as a result of flying glass during enemy air raids or explosions growing out of potential domestic sabotage.

"Village" Injunction Denied

New York Supreme Court Justice Bernard L. Shientag last week refused to grant to Classic Features Theatre, Inc., operator of the Apollo theatre, an injunction to restain the Park Circle Theatre, Inc., owner of the Park Theatre, and Arthur Mayer and Joseph Burstyn, Inc., defendants, from playing the film "Forgotten Village" at the Park. The suit charged the breach of a contract made in April, 1942, under which the plaintiff allegedly was to have the right to exhibit the film seven days before any other New York theatre. Justice Shientag ordered a trial of the action after stating that there was an issue as to whether the plaintiff's contract had been cancelled.

Cartoon Studios Hit by Priorities

The Max Fleischer studio, turning out "Popeye" and "Superman" cartoons for Paramount release, is beginning to feel the stringencies of war, according to Sam Buchwald, general manager, and Isidore Sparber, studio director, at the New York Paramount office on Monday.

Cellulose materials, and skilled men, are the immediate shortages, Mr. Buchwald remarked, noting that the sheets on which characters are drawn, are now washed, and used several times. Mr. Buchwald said the conscription of manpower was being felt, but that neither the studio nor anyone in it had thus far asked for the blanket deferment which presumably may be obtained under a recent ruling applying to the motion picture industry, from the national Selective Service headquarters.

Mr. Buchwald added that the studio had "stocked up some" on vital materials, but that these proved insufficient. He foresaw no critical difficulties immediately ahead, however.

The Fleischer studio will spend more on the new season cartoons, he added. However, the bulk of this expenditure is caused by increased costs in every category of production. He refused to hazard how much the studio budget would be.

Mr. Buchwald noted that Fleischer financing is done independently from Paramount.

Although the studio has experimented, and has already brought four "nephews" into the Popeye series, it does not contemplate introduction of new characters now, Mr. Buchwald said, remarking the commitments to Paramount were only for the two series named.

Participation in the war effort is reflected by some short subjects made for the Navy, and by introduction of the Navy theme into the Popeye series, Mr. Buchwald commented. He added that officials of the company had been in Washington recently, and that more work directly for the Government appeared a prospect.

Artkino Releasing "Red Tanks"

Artkino Pictures, Inc., U. S. distributor of Soviet films, announced in New York this week that the release of the new Russian picture, "Red Tanks," scheduled for the Stanley Theatre in that city, depended entirely on the run of "Guerrilla Brigade," another Soviet picture, currently having its first-run at that house. "Red Tanks," which portrays the action of a Russian scouting detachment against a German fortified position, originally was to be released at the end of this month.

Nikola Napoli, president of Artkino, is in Hollywood where he is reported to be negotiating with major producing companies for remakes of Russian films and also is making arrangements for the dubbing of English dialogue in several new pictures made in Soviet studios.

20th-Fox and Consolidated Profits Up

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation last Friday, in New York, reported a consolidated net profit, after Federal income tax, of $841,561 for the thirteen weeks ended March 28, 1942, after providing a reserve for foreign assets of $1,100,000. This compares with a profit of $404,089 for the first quarter of 1941, after a comparable reserve of $350,000 and a profit for the fourth quarter of 1941 of $3,372,762. This latter figure included a dividend from National Theatres Corporation of $693,000, and was also affected by the release of a portion of funds previously frozen in England. No dividends were received from National Theatres Corporation during the first quarter of either year.

The Corporation is not considered liable for excess profits tax on earnings for this period, it was said.

The profit for the first quarter of 1942 equals 28c per share of common stock after the usual preferred dividend.

The Board of Directors of the company at its meeting last Thursday declared a cash dividend of 37½c per share for the second quarter of 1942 on the outstanding preferred stock of the corporation, payable June 30, 1942 to stockholders of record at the close of business June 15, 1942.

Paramount Earnings Put at $3,000,000

It was reported this week that preliminary estimates place the first quarter earnings of Paramount Pictures, Inc., this year, exclusive of British income, at approximately $3,000,000, after new taxees. For the same period last year, the company's earnings were in the neighborhood of $2,475,000, from all sources, according to Wall Street observers. The new earnings, therefore, represent a new 10-year high for Paramount. Final audit for the quarter is reported currently under way and probably will be completed shortly when official estimate of the earnings will be released. First quarter earnings thus evidenced are held by observers to indicate a possible record earning year for the company which is observing its 30th anniversary.

Consolidated Net $222,589 for Quarter

For the three months ended March 31st, 1942, net earnings of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc, and its subsidiaries, before deducting any provision for Federal taxes on income of such amount, are $222,589, according to a statement issued last week by H. J. Yates, Jr., vice-president and treasurer.

After deducting estimated provision for estimated Federal normal and surtax of $69,002, the balance of net earnings equals $153,586 which is equivalent to 38 cents per share on the 400,000 shares of $2.00 preferred stock.

CBS Quarter Profit Is $1,155,062

Net profit for the three-month period ended April 4th of the Columbia Broadcasting Company was $1,155,062 as compared with $1,261,247 for the first quarter of 1941, it was reported last week by William S. Paley, president, at the annual stockholders' meeting of the company. Directors were reelected and also declared a cash dividend of 30 cents per share on the present Class A and Class B stock of $2.50 par value. The dividend is payable June 5th to stockholders of record of May 22nd.

Income from the sale of facilities, talent, lines, records, etc., after deductions for discounts and allowances was $11,449,645 for the first three months this year, as compared with $10,380,335 for the same period last year.

SEC Reports on Stock Deals

Disposition of 3,200 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock by J. Robert Rubin, officer, New York, was reported by the Securities and Exchange Commission last week in Washington, in its first summary of March transactions of officers and directors in the securities of their corporations.

At the close of the month, Mr. Rubin held 10,415 shares of Loew common, it was shown.

The SEC also reported that Loew's, Inc., continued to pick up common stock of Loew's Boston Theatres, buying 224 shares during March to give it a total of 119,241 shares.

A report on Radio-Keith-Orpheum showed that Frederick L. Ehrman, director, New York, purchased 500 shares of common in March, to increase his holdings to 700 shares.

A belated report on Paramount showed that in December, 1941, Adolph Zukor, director, New York, exchanged 200 shares of second preferred for 180 shares of common, wiping out his interest in the preferred and increasing his holdings of common to 380 shares.

Reports on the holdings of persons becoming officers or directors of corporations showed that Howard Dietz, New York, held five shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock when he became an officer in that company February 3rd, and Allen L. Carter, Jr., Baltimore, held no Universal Pictures securities when he was made a director March 16th.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

ATP

COME ON, GEORGE: George Formby—Print was bad, but business very good. Patrons liked Formby. Should do well anywhere.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Columbia

BED TIME STORY: Loretta Young, Fredric March —Most excellent and wholesome comedy. Recommend preferred play date if backed by good campaign. Audience highly pleased. Audible laughs aplenty. Played Wednesday-Thursday to double average gross.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

INVADERS, THE: Howard, Massey, Olivier—Ran this with "Mexican Spitfire at Sea" to just average attendance. Thought this would draw extra well here but I was fooled. Nevertheless it is a truly excellent picture and should be seen by everybody. The story is different and each actor has played his part perfectly. Beautiful scenes in Canada are an extra asset. Part of the poor attendance can be blamed on a country-wide blackout the first night. Running time, 104 minutes. Played May 8-9.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

PRAIRIE STRANGER: Charles Starrett—Not so good. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 1-2.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

YOU'LL NEVER GET RICH: Fred Astaire, Rita Hayworth, Robert Benchley—The time has come again when we must offer a word of praise to Columbia Pictures for producing another dance sequence that was heartily enjoyed by all. As ever, Fred Astaire is still the master of "tapping toes" and we were really surprised to see how well Rita Hayworth filled the bill as his partner, a difficult task. Robert Benchley's dry humor came as a welcome change from the ordinary "slapstick" brand. Running time, 88 minutes. Played April 25.—J. A. Reynolds, New Jersey State Prison Theatre, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Grand National

PANAMA PATROL: Leon Ames, Charlotte Wynters—Everybody seems satisfied with this. We were at the box office.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—Wonderful story, color, acting. More favorable comment from patrons than any picture we've ever played. Don't miss it. Played April 27-28.—W. R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural small town patronage.

BORN TO SING: Virginia Weidler, Ray McDonald—This is pretty good entertainment and will please quite well—if you can get them in. Nearly hit a new low here for business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 17-18.—K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

BUGLE SOUNDS, THE: Wallace Beery, Marjorie Main—A good picture that was allocated somewhere near the price that was within the picture's possibilities. Beery has always been a good draw here and this picture did average business, along with a new "March of Time." Made quite a bit of army stuff all in one show, but none complained and we didn't lose anything on the run.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

H. M. PULHAM, ESQ.: Hedy Lamarr, Robert Young, Ruth Hussey—Not a small town feature. Why Metro wastes three stars on such a picture as this, is beyond me. Apparently they are depending on the stars to draw in the people. Results: story slow moving, no draw, exhibitors complain. Surely Metro can produce better pictures than this, as they have the best personnel available. They should reverse their method and build a story around the stars. Running time, 117 minutes. Played April 29-30.—A. T. Wohlert, Main Theatre, Altamont, Ill. Small town patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

WOMAN OF THE YEAR: Spencer Tracy, Katharine Hepburn—Grand picture which more than pleased the few who saw it. When Spencer Tracy cannot get them out, there's something wrong and it wasn't the picture this time. Just why it didn't do business, we cannot understand. Running time, 112 minutes. Played May 3-4.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

YANK ON THE BURMA ROAD, A: Laraine Day, Barry Nelson—A good programmer, with action, that created a lot of interest coupled with another feature with a radio connection; we had a very good double bill that did better than average business. 'Yank'' has some good stuff in it, the kind that people will pay money to see.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BAHAMA PASSAGE: Madeleine Carroll, Stirling Hayden—Color didn't help this one. Just a second feature. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 26-27.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

BAHAMA PASSAGE: Madeleine Carroll, Stirling Hayden—The color was this picture's only redeeming feature and the business was way below average, barely grossing expenses. Worth a date on mid-week or weekend if allocated in the lower brackets.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—Good musical but below average box office on a Sunday, Monday, Tuesday play date.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

HENRY ALDRICH FOR PRESIDENT: Jimmy Lydon, Charlie Smith—Plenty of laughs and this from a mixed audience. Went over better than any previous picture of the series. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 1-2.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

HOLD BACK THE DAWN: Charles Boyer, Olivia de Havilland—Excellent class picture, well acted, average Wednesday-Thursday gross.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE: Bob Hope, Vera Zorina —Nice business on this picture. Good for small and large towns.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT, THE: Ellen Drew, Charles Ruggles — A made-to-order show for small towns and should be well received in larger centers. It's a picture with a moral and is exceptionally well produced. Played April 24-25.—W. R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Sask., Can. Rural small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RIVER: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—A fair musical. Dragged with too much music. Story not strong enough to support it. Running time, 90 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

Producers Releasing Corp.

REG'LAR FELLERS: Billy Lee, Carl "Alfalfa" Switzer—This was okay, but nothing to shout about. The sound was very poor; maybe we had a bad print. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 29-30. —Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Republic

BAD MEN OF DEADWOOD: Roy Rogers, "Gabby" Hayes—Nice picture that we played with "Panama Patrol," to satisfactory weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CODE OF THE OUTLAW: Tom Tyler, Bob Steele —Well received on week-end dual bill. Glad to see my old school chum, Ken Duncan, in the picture, but don't think they have have shot him.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GIT ALONG, LITTLE DOGGIES: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Good Autry picture. Print was poor. Running time, 71 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

HOME IN WYOMIN': Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Another good western from Gene Autry which pleased the Friday-Saturday crowd. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 8-9.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MR. DISTRICT ATTORNEY IN THE CARTER CASE: James Ellison, Virginia Gilmore—It seems that any picture with a radio following will bring out a class of people who seldom attend and you wonder where they have been. This is a good little programer, just the right length for a double bill.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MR. DISTRICT ATTORNEY IN THE CARTER CASE: James Ellison, Virginia Gilmore—See review on "Sierra Sue" Republic.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill.

SIERRA SUE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Very good Gene Autry. Played Friday, Saturday with "Mr. District Attorney in the Carter Case," a good program drama that brought in the radio fans. Above average gross for this combination.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

SLEEPYTIME GAL: Judy Canova—A most excellent musical comedy and thoroughly satisfied audience. Used three days, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday. Held up all three nights. Above average grosses.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BALL OF FIRE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—This is a good show, a little slow in spots, but definitely funny and will please most any audience in the average town. Our crowd got quite a kick out of it and some came back to see it again.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BANDIT TRAIL: Tim Holt—A pretty good western, plenty noisy, with a lot of riding and some action. The musical number was pretty good and the cast was better than most of the horse operas.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CITIZEN KANE: Orson Welles—One day after showing this we still feel hesitant about walking abroad without an escort. Half of the few dozen that paid to see this masterpiece walked out and the other half remained only to think up new dirty cracks to cast in our direction on the way out. Running time, 119 minutes. Played April 26-27.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY ROMANCE: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—A nice second feature. Running time.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES

War Bond & Stamp Sale in Theatres begins May 30

66 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

IN NAME ONLY: Carole Lombard, Cary Grant—Don't skip this one. Excellent story, excellent acting. —G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

LITTLE FOXES, THE: Bette Davis, Herbert Marshall—Good picture and fair business. Not a small town show. Running time, 116 minutes. Played May 6-7.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LOOK WHO'S LAUGHING: Edgar Bergen, Charlie McCarthy, Fibber and Molly McGee, the Great Gildersleeve—We broke all existing house records for one day with this picture, and found out where our patrons have been hiding for the last 10 years. They've been turning dials and now they finally got a chance to see what their favorites looked like in real life, so they came to the show in droves, went home satisfied, and some of them have been back for other pictures. Book this one and let them know when; you'll do plenty of business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MEXICAN SPITFIRE AT SEA: Lupe Velez, Leon Errol—Ran this with "The Invaders" to average attendance. My "Spitfire" fans are declining. I, perpersonally, get a big kick out of Leon Errol's impersonation of Lord Epping and there were some good laughs from the crowd during its showing. However, the plot idea has been used up so that its novelty is gone. Leon, how about a new idea now? Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 8-9.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

PARACHUTE BATTALION: Robert Preston, Nancy Kelly—Played Friday-Saturday single feature. Usually double feature this change. Box office up to average. Show well liked; comments good.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS: Walt Disney cartoon—Brought this back to play while the kids were out of school. The best three-week days we had in years. Running time, 83 minutes. Played April 21-23.—H. Golden, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

VALLEY OF THE SUN: Lucille James, James Craig—Good western and good business.—Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 3-4.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ON THE SUNNY SIDE: Roddy McDowall—An overgrown Our Gang comedy. Business was light. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 5.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ON THE SUNNY SIDE: Roddy McDowall—A dandy program picture based on children's lives. Loud praises were spoken. Good week in business.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE: George Montgomery, Mary Howard—Fox would benefit more by staying out of the Western class with unknown Western stars. Youngsters and oldsters want "name" stars, not Zane Grey's. Running time, 56 minutes. Played April 17-18.—A. T. Wohlert, Main Theatre, Altamont, Ill. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN DEB: Jane Withers, Cobina Wright, Jr.—Believe this took with our patrons better than any Withers' picture in a long time. Well produced and a fine cast. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 6-7.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN DEB: Jane Withers, Cobina Wright, Jr.—A very good picture that drew average business. Jane doesn't weaken any and really steals the show, which is as it should be. Gives a good imitation of one of Fox's importations and does a real job on the drums. Swell show for family or bargain night.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Heine, John Payne—This is swell mass entertainment. Attendance was very good. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 26-28.—K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

SWAMP WATER: W. Huston, Walter Brennan, Ann Baxter—This was excellent entertainment. Business satisfactory and not a squawk from the audience. Another good point in favor of those who contend that good pictures and more of them will cure the box office blues. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 29-30.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

NEW CONTRIBUTORS TO DEPARTMENT

Three new contributors have reported to the What the Picture Did for Me department in recent weeks, and nine others have resumed after an absence of some time. The new contributors are:

STANLEY SUMNER, University Theatre, Harvard Square, Cambridge, Mass.

C. B. CARTER, Clemson and Co-Ed Theatres, Brevard, N. C.

L. C. ANDERSON, Anderson Theatre, Mullins, S. C.

The contributors who have resumed after a lapse are:

E. C. VAN FRADENBURG, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo.

U. S. ALLAIRE, Theatre Victoria, Victoriaville, Quebec, Can.

H. B. NARFASON, Foam Lake Theatre, Foam Lake, Saskatchewan, Can.

C. V. SCHOFIELD, Blackhawk Theatre, Lansing, Iowa.

C. E. FISMER, JR., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

CRIST S. CAPORAL, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla.

EDDIE MANSFIELD, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

A. R. DAKIN, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can.

K. A. SPEARS, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash.

SWAMP WATER: W. Huston, Walter Brennan, Anne Baxter—A good show that didn't do much business at our box office and we still don't know the answer. We played it late; maybe that had something to do with it, but still think the picture merits more business than we did. The locale was different; the cast was fine in parts that looked difficult. On a weekend, it'll do business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WESTERN UNION: Robert Young, Randolph Scott—A good western, with a lot of action. Running time, 95 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

CORSICAN BROTHERS: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Ruth Warrick—Although this was appreciated by those attending, it failed to do normal business. Running time, 110 minutes. Played May 3-4.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

KIT CARSON: John Hall, Lynn Bari—A western worth playing. Story good, mixed with plenty of action. Running time, 97 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

OF MICE AND MEN: Burgess Meredith, Betty Field, Lon Chaney, Jr.—To me it's a peculiar story. Can't say I liked it; can't say I didn't. Same goes for my customers. Running time, 106 minutesr.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

RAFFLES: David Niven, Olivia de Havilland—Just fair; title meaningless; good only for second feature. Running time, 71 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

TO BE OR NOT TO BE: Carole Lombard, Jack Benny—A nice mixture of humor, thrills and unexpected turns in the plot. This drew a very good crowd here and they seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly. This good crowd came in competition with a free all-college dance, so the picture must have what it takes. Running time, 99 minutes. Played May 7.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Universal

BUCK PRIVATES: Abbott and Costello—Just a screwball picture that brought them in and satisfied all. Played May 1-2.—W. R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Sask., Can. Rural small town patronage.

MY LITTLE CHICKADEE: Mae West, W. C. Fields—Ran this on our bargain nights. Our patrons didn't think it was much of a bargain. The poorest business in many a moon. Running time, 83 minutes. —H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

NORTH TO THE KLONDIKE: Brod Crawford, Lon Chaney—Very fine North woods drama with excellent scenes. Played Friday-Saturday with comedy, "Jail House Blues," Universal, to slightly above average gross.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY: Abbott and Costello—These boys are tops right now in this town. We do better than average with their pictures, and they satisfy because people are going for pictures that are full of comedy. This picture has a lot of fun that is not forced, never restrained, and my patrons really feel amply repaid for the time and money spent. Who said "It is to laugh?" He was smart.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY: Abbott and Costello—Top grosser, top audience pleaser. Played Sunday, Monday, Tuesday.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

UNSEEN ENEMY: Devine, Carillo, Terry—This one is not so good. These players deserve better stories. Couple it with a strong companion feature if you play it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played April 17-18. —K. A. Spears, Roxy Theatre, Winlock, Wash. Rural patronage.

WHEN THE DALTONS RODE: Randolph Scott, Kay Francis, Brian Donlevy—Good feature. Don't pass it up if you have it bought. Running time, 80 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

WOLF MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Lon Chaney—We advertised the horror angle and got in quite a few of the young people, but the picture was a long way from a knockout. Not much of the scary stuff, nor any different from the many that have been made before.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris—We substituted this for one of this year's group and are glad we did. It sort of eulogized the "bar men of Missouri." Running time. 74 minutes. Played May 1-2.&—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GRANNY GET YOUR GUN: May Robson, Harry Davenport—A good comedy, but worth playing only as a second feature. Running time, 56 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

MALE ANIMAL, THE: Henry Fonda, Olivia de Havilland—Some liked it, others didn't. There are a lot of funny lines and the one scene of over-imbibing is worth anyone's time. Drew average business, but reactions were mixed. Use your own judgment.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Priscilla Lane, Jeffrey Lynn—Delightful picture. Good comedy and story pleased all. Played April 17-18.—W. R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Sask., Can. Rural small town patronage.

ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN: Fredric March, Martha Scott—A religious subject that has been wonderfully handled. It has an excellent cast which makes this picture one of the outstanding dramatic successes of the year. Martha Scott and Fredric March in the feature roles deliver heart-warming performances, ably supported by many of the more favorite minor players. Definitely a good picture and deserving of much credit. Running time, 108 minutes. Played April 18.—J. A. Reynolds, New Jersey State Prison Theatre, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

YOU'RE IN THE ARMY NOW: Jimmy Durante, Jane Wyman—Exceptionally good slapstick comedy. Used on double bill Friday, Saturday. Average box office—doubled with an equally good musical or drama suitable any date.—Stanley Theatre, Galena, Ill. General patronage.

WOMEN IN THE WIND: Kay Francis, William Gargan—A nice little feature. Play it, if you've passed it by before. Running time, 62 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BOB WILE, Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

CHANGING TIMES, CHANGING METHODS

The successful showman has earned that title because of his ability to adapt himself to varying conditions. He is a resourceful fellow who knows how to take advantage of what might, to men of lesser calibre, be a catastrophe, and twist it to suit his own purposes.

Today, because of the war and conditions resulting from the war, audiences are changing. Whereas, formerly Mr. and Mrs. Public picked up a newspaper and looked for a picture they particularly wanted to see, today they are finding themselves restricted to theatres within walking distance or in easy reach by public conveyance.

The result in many cases is that theatres have, to all intents, swapped audiences. The good showman will recognize this by redirecting his advertising.

Perhaps it would be better to withdraw advertising from surrounding towns and concentrate it on your immediate bailiwick. The money saved in a widespread billing campaign and in newspaper advertising in adjoining towns might well be put into an institutional campaign wherein you sell the consistency of the attractions at your theatre and the theatre itself.

The changing conditions suggest cooperation with local bus and street car lines; that portion of your audience which formerly relied on private automobiles will now largely patronize public transport. You perhaps can arrange with the traction companies to schedule a bus or car to coincide with the break of your shows.

Maybe some of your advertising should be car cards. Bus terminals are important points for advertising, too. Possibly a combination rate can be worked out covering transportation and admission to the show.

Bill Morton and George French of the RKO Albee, Providence, have devised a car card which has a background of institutional copy and a slot for inserting each new week's show. They foresaw the return to public transportation and took advantage of it. (See page 58.)

Let us hear what you are doing to meet changing times.

WAR SHOWMANSHIP AWARD

Monroe Greenthal says: "As Chairman of the Publicity and Advertising Division of the War Activities Committee, I want to compliment Motion Picture Herald on the War Showmanship Award. This special Award is extremely vital at the present time, when close to 15,000 theatres are not only merchandising their pictures but, at the same time, are working hand in hand with the various Government activities. If this Showmanship Award accomplishes only one thing, namely, assisting in the increase of the sale of War Bonds and Stamps, it will have earned its salt many times over."

MANPOWER

"Men are leaving so fast for the Army or Navy that I have been compelled, in addition to my other duties, to operate my machines four days per week," writes Tom di Lorenzo, manager of the New Paltz Theatre, New Paltz, N. Y. Here, indeed, is a serious situation.

Tom is faced with a problem which will confront many other theatre owners. Men who are skilled in operating projectors are often also able to perform work which is valuable to the war effort. So those who do not serve in the armed forces may be taken into other industries not necessarily more essential than the theatre but which might be more lucrative and also might offer better working hours.

His own ability to operate the machines has temporarily saved the situation for Tom. Have you a man or two in reserve?

AIDING THE WAR EFFORT

"I'm selling War Bonds and Stamps," says one showman, "and I'm showing all the Victory Films available. What more can I do to aid the war effort?"

Well, there is a lot that he can do.

For instance, here's Will Briemann, manager of the Ambassador, Baltimore, who uses excerpts from an official publication by Baltimore's OCD, on the front page of his programs.

Nat Silver of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., staged Safety Defense Shows. The Skouras Theatres throughout New York's metropolitan area have thrown their doors open for instruction of air raid wardens on Sunday mornings.

HAPPINESS

CHARLES LAUGHTON
TUTTLES of TAHITI

"Many good movies are made from Post stories," says a line at the bottom of this easel in the lobby of the Capitol Theatre Madison, Wis., of which Marlowe Conner is manager.

Krolick Adapts Selling Methods To Attraction

Adapting his selling methods to the type of attraction at hand, Art Krolick, manager of the Century Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., submits as examples of diversification his campaigns on three attractions—"Rings on Her Fingers," "Bashful Bachelor" and a triple horror show, "Wolf Man," "Strange Case of Dr. X" and "The Raven," the latter a short subject.

For the first named picture, one of Krolick's stunts was a teaser folder, accordion style, "Girls! How to get rings on your fingers in three easy lessons." Two thousand of these were distributed in front of schools and in residential neighborhoods. A mystery melody contest was conducted over Station WHEC; listeners identifying hidden melodies received passes. An usher, dressed and posing as a newsboy, yelled "Extra" and gave away heralds on a busy corner. Announcement cards were distributed in all beauty salons.

Radio Promotion

For the Lum and Abner picture, Krolick got several radio tieups because of the stars' radio background. He obtained the cooperation of a department store for a window display with a farm atmosphere. Two men in typical Lum and Abner garb made a hit on the principal streets; they distributed imprinted grab bags imprinted with full details about the show. The stars' radio sponsors, Alka Seltzer, furnished window cards which were planted with playdates in 150 stores.

The triple horror show was plugged over the radio in the lobby and extensively in the newspapers. "Wolf-bane" envelopes containing alfalfa were distributed on Main Street; "Faint checks" entitling the bearer to see a show another time if he fainted at the triple horror show, attracted lots of attention; all these were distributed by a "ghost-costumed" man who was followed by crowds.

Roberts Gives "Heaven" Special Campaign

George Roberts, manager of Warners' Grand Theatre, Camden, N. J., put on a special campaign for "One Foot in Heaven." In advance for two weeks he ran a coming trailerette and played a record of the picture title between intermissions. A week in advance, he carried an underline on three-sheets, a special lobby display, sound trailer, midget cards in nearby stores, underline in newspapers, personal letters mailed to newspapers, clergymen and civic groups. At a special screening George distributed pictorial accordion folders, and at the theatre distributed 5,000 special novelties telling how to be a father in seven not-so-easy lessons. Further, Roberts had special book window tie-ups, used special valance on the marquee, made personal telephone calls to prominent civic organizations, tied in with five-and-dime music counters, arranged for special announcements on the radio, and restaurants carried underline on menus announcing the playdate.

Selling Points
ON THE NEW PRODUCT

MEET THE STEWARTS (Columbia): This comedy of marital life will be sold principally as comedy. There are several pictorial strips available in mats showing some of the funny situations; on the serious side there are a number of stills showing the couple's newly furnished home. This offers opportunity to ask furniture stores, real estate offices, upholsterers and the like to cooperate with you. The story is adapted from a series in the Ladies' Home Journal; Curtis Publishing Co. has 1,000 lobby cards for theatre use and will furnish 100,000 display cards to dealers.

REAP THE WILD WIND (Paramount): In the three engagements this picture has played, national tieups figured largely in the selling. The story was serialized in the Saturday Evening Post and has also been published in book form. Tieups with magazine distributors as well as bookstores and libraries are indicated. There's good stuff for the kids in a study guide available in quantity, a study chart prepared by Paramount and a coloring contest.

THE BIG SHOT (Warner Bros.): To be sold strictly from the gangster angle, if local conditions permit. Humphrey Bogart's past pictures in which he portrayed gangsters can be brought to memory through a contest. A tabloid herald, a lifesize standee of Bogart pointing his gun straight at the viewer and "Wanted" posters are the best means for selling the gangster interest.

MISS ANNIE ROONEY (United Artists): Shirley Temple, star of this picture, is being glamorized. There's a full-page magazine feature, suggested cooperative ad and special art and publicity—all emphasizing "She's a Glamour Girl Now". Her appearance as "Junior Miss" in the radio show of that name offers opportunity for radio tieups, particularly spot announcements on Wednesday evenings. Shirley's first romance, her first party dress and her fondness for jitterbugging are suggested as subjects on which to base other efforts.

SYNCOPATION (RKO Radio): The title and the many musical numbers suggest that the cooperation of music stores, bands, hotels, night clubs and radio stations be enlisted. Glossaries of jitterbug terms and short paragraphs written in the vernacular, with prizes for the best translations, are also suggested. Radio stations which cooperated in selecting the seven leading dance bands are listed in the press book. Since the contest was sponsored by the Saturday Evening Post, inserts can be included in all copies sold from newsstands in your vicinity.

Golden Egg Hunt Aids "Gold Rush"

Contacting the largest market in downtown Providence, Manager George French and publicist Bill Morton ahead of "The Gold Rush" at the RKO Albee Theatre featured a "Golden Egg Hunt" wherein folks purchasing eggs during the week of April 30 to May 9 were invited to look among them for a golden egg which would entitle them to admission to the show and a twenty-dollar cash prize which was promoted from the cooperating merchant. The store featured a display with background copy reading: "See Charlie Chaplin in 'The Gold Rush' at the RKO Albee Theatre. With $20 and join in the Golden Egg Hunt here."

For outside attention, a member of the service staff was dressed as the comedian and sent out to cover local night clubs, in spots being invited to take part in the floor shows. In addition the man also covered the local schools. A lobby stunt included treasure chest and the distribution of tagged keys carrying copy to the effect that those whose keys fit the chest would receive a cash award, guest tickets going to runners-up. A wire received from Mr. Chaplin at the coast was blown up for display in Postal Telegraph window.

Day Publishes Theatre Tabloid

A miniature tabloid newspaper of four pages is being published by Jack Day, manager of Wilmer & Vincent's Penn Theatre, instead of regular programs or herald. In addition to theatre copy, it contains items of local interest and includes departments of interest to women, such as recipes and fan gossip. Some 5,000 papers are distributed in the area and once it gets under way, Day hopes to sell enough advertising for the paper to defray printing cost and distribution entirely. Scene mats from current pictures are used generously. In addition to the paid advertising, there are three ads for the theatre itself.

Lamm Features "Bugle" Contest

A stunt that is reported to have proved successful for Julius Lamm at Warners' Uptown, in Cleveland, ahead of "Bugle Sounds," was large setpiece which was planted in his lobby three weeks in advance. Bugle calls were played on an automatic phonograph and anyone identifying five consecutive calls received guest tickets to the show.

To insure that passersby will know that the show is going on during blackouts, Bob Weitman, managing director of the Paramount, New York, uses these special blackout aids: luminescent sign, buttons and belt. So far, blackouts in New York have all been for practise. But, profiting by the experience of English theatres, Bob is prepared to let the public know that he is ready to fulfill that old slogan: "The Show Must Go On".

Exchange of Flag Ceremony Staged on "Clouds" by Burke

Contacting the Canadian Legion officials ahead of "Captains of the Clouds" at the Capitol theatre, in Sarnia, Ontario, Bill Burke promoted the idea of staging an exchange of flags ceremony at the theatre between the local Canadian Legion and the American Legionnaires from Port Huron. The two bodies paraded to the theatre preceded by the local Bugle Corps, while prominent speakers from both cities gave welcoming addresses on stage, stressing the good neighbor angle. The local veterans then presented the legionnaires with the Union Jack, they in turn presenting the Stars and Stripes. Burke reports a goodly crowd assembling to witness the proceedings with a photographer and reporter from one of the papers on hand to give the affair publicity.

To interest the children, Bill ran a special model airplane building contest, tying in with the Kiwanis Model Airplane Club. Taking a photographer and reporter to the club rooms where the boys were working on their entries, brought a large two-column cut with stories on the contest. In addition, Burke promoted tinted airplane photos for giveaway.

Tin Soldier Matinee Inaugurated by Lake

In an effort to interest children in the salvaging of scrap metals, Henry F. Lake, at the Broad Theatre, in Newark, N. J., tied in with the Mayor's Salvage Committee and the American Legion to have kids rummage through their toys and bring to the theatre any tin soldiers they had on hand. The idea was implanted in the Newark Star Ledger, which played it up big with stories, featuring the special matinee as "Tin Soldier Mobilization Day." Local cadets were enlisted to aid in rounding up the material and the theatreman promoted the Mayor's office and the American Legion for defense stamps to be awarded to the kids bringing in the largest aggregation of toys.

A local printer contributed 20,000 throwaways, which were distributed to every school in the city, window displays of tin soldiers and machine guns were featured, and a parade was staged with the kids marching to the theatre ahead of the cadets playing martial music.

Lake reports that both the New York Daily Mirror and the Newark Star Ledger sent photographers and reporters to cover the event which produced over a thousand pounds of metal.

Teaser Ads Featured By Pincus on "Mr. Bug"

For the opening of "Mr. Bug" at the Utah, in Salt Lake City, Charlie Pincus, ran teaser ads in his local daily reading: "Wait for the greatest Technicolor cartoon ever made." This was followed through the week before opening right up to smash ad on opening day with title, etc. Pincus secured ten 24-sheets, cut out the four figures thereon and mounted them for store window displays, in addition featuring a set for his lobby. Music store windows were tied in, phonograph booths and music departments festooned with streamers and playdate credits. For book store displays, Charlie had special one-sheet cards which featured production stills, including original sketches from the Fleisher Studio, while window cards were tacked around school blocks.

Another Round Tabler who went to town on "Mr. Bug" was John Makemson at Schine's Van Wert, in Van Wert, Ohio, by tieing up local dancing school instructress who held a "Hippity Hop" dance contest on the theatre stage Saturday night ahead of opening with several small children participating.

Flex Reports on Radio Selling

by JACK FLEX

Manager, Keith Theatre
Syracuse, N. Y.

Whenever there are electrical transcriptions furnished by the exchanges for their pictures, we have been lucky to get them played over one or several of the local stations, with tiein plugs for the theatre and playdate. These are used mostly on station recorded programs, and are spotted several times each day. Stations welcome these transcriptions in exchange for courtesies to the theatre.

Again, whenever we have a musical picture, we furnish radio stations with recordings of the song hits, and they in turn use these records on their recorded programs, with mention of the fact the songs are sung by so and so in the picture, including title of picture and name of theatre.

On special short subjects, such as March of Time, Information Please, Quiz Kids, etc., which programs are carried by local stations, we get spot announcements gratis, following station breaks whenever they can spot them in, mentioning the fact a subject carried by station is playing at theatre. In return for this, we give stations a one-frame trailer calling the attention of the audience that station carries the program on whatever day or night it is scheduled. Spot announcements given us run to an average of 40 a week.

One of the local stations has an hourly news program, and in return for plugs given us on our current attractions, we run a one-frame trailer on the news programs of the station. We get very good results from this tieup.

Two of the local stations have musical clubs, and play up to date hit tunes, along with old timers, asking club members to call in name of tune played. First limited number called in are awarded guest tickets to the theatre, in return for which we get plenty of mention on our attractions.

Special feature commentators come in handy to us, by using material furnished by us, for their programs. This includes Hollywood news about coming pictures, fashion notes, highlights of current attractions, and in cases of outstanding pictures, such as current topics, use the basis of the plot for their topic on that particular day they can spot same. Especially is this true when a March of Time subject is on our program.

Redmond Holds Sneak For "Remember the Day"

To sell "Remember the Day" at the Bonham, Fairbury, Neb., Jimmie Redmond held a sneak prevue three weeks ahead of playdate and at that time received written endorsements on the picture. A week before opening, Redmond sent out 250 letters to those giving the finest endorsements, telling them of playdates and suggesting that they see the picture again and recommending that they advise their friends of the opening. The Round Tabler reports a number of return customers and countless folks who attended on the word of their friends. In addition, various organizations gave the date a plug at informal talks.

Cornell Promotes Savings Stamps

Up in Tupper Lake, N. Y., Clay Cornell at the State Theatre has promoted his local merchants for sufficient Savings Stamps for prizes in connection with a contest for all school children on "Why We Should Buy War Savings Bonds and Stamps." In this connection, the local paper was also tied in to handle the attendant publicity.

To build interest in his "Tripoli" date, Cornell sold the Rotary and Lions Clubs on the idea of entertaining a group of men called in the Selective Service at the opening performance. As a further goodwill gesture, the Round Tabler has arranged with one of the merchants for a motorcade to transport a contingent of local draftees to Saranac Lake on the morning of their departure, this stunt broke local dailies.

For the new MOT reel "America's New Army" featuring Generals MacArthur and Marshall, the theatreman held a special screening of this subject for members of the Rotary Club and the press. In connection with the registration for volunteers for work in civilian defense, Clay set up tables in his lobby, so that women could register, attendants were on hand to handle the registrants.

Favorite "Male Animal" Search Landed by Kline

Contacting four local high schools in his area, Lee Kline at the Warner Orpheum, in Philadelphia, held a contest to pick the students favorite "Male Animal" or boy to rescue Olivia DeHavilland from a Desert Island. Schools were all provided with ballot cards, a display piece was planted in the lobby and Lee promoted a local merchant for a wrist watch to be presented to the winner.

Six boys were selected as the finalists and entertained at dinner at a local hotel, the actual presentation of the prize being handled by an announcer from the radio station which covered the event. The dailies came through with stories on the contest and the cooperating merchant displayed the watch gift in his window well ahead, with appropriate tiein copy.

Transportation Companies Utilized for Advertising

Trolley cars and buses are becoming increasingly important media for advertising as restrictions on gasoline and tires force automobiles off the road. George E. French, manager, and Bill Morton, publicity director of the RKO Albee Theatre, Providence, R. I., have taken steps to obtain the full value of this medium by developing a poster which is in the shape of a frame into which new copy can be inserted every week.

As Brown and French point out, not only does the idea put a message across to an increasing number of people each week, but the idea of an institutional ad with a place for changing copy each week saves paper, an important item in the future.

Stoltz Becomes a Father

Congratulations are in order for Arnold Stoltz, manager of the Warner Avon Theatre, in Utica, N. Y., who announces the arrival of Marjorie Lynn on Thursday, May 14.

Newsstands Help Meyer Publicize "Spy Smasher"

Ray Meyer, at Warners' 69th St. Theatre, Philadelphia, tied in with the newsstands and magazine stores to publicize "Spy Smasher." In the store window he placed a one-sheet mounted on board with copy: "Buy the Book—See the Thrilling Serial—Starting, etc,—." This was supported by two smaller easels plugging the serial along with a display of magazines which carry the character from which the serial is taken. In the upper portion of the window was a cut-out of the principal character in costume and typical pose, hung poised to give the effect of smashing through the window. This was made additionally impressive by painting jagged streaks on the glass.

Brien Has Gun Display

Patrons of the Belmar, Pittsburgh, were asked to "pick out the type of gun that killed Johnny Eager" from a display of arms in the theatre lobby arranged by Lige Brien for his engagement of "Johnny Eager." He also had newsboys distribute 2500 extras on the film.

Sells Academy Award

Charles Crowley, of Warners' Grand Theatre, Vineland, N. J., started two weeks in advance to sell "How Green Was My Valley" with a 40 x 60 calling attention to the Academy Award that the picture received this year. A special ad was placed in the local high school magazine stressing the Educational and Academy Award standards of the picture. A co-operative ad was promoted in the local daily, the motif of the full page being class and dignity. In keeping with the motif, the page was headed "Best of the Year," flanked by two miniature Oscars. The dozen advertisers used "The Best in . . ." theme for their copy with picture credit.

Boys in Aviator Garb

Charles Moyer, manager of Warners' State Theatre, Hanover, Pa., had boys dressed as aviators distributing heralds to publicize "Captains of the Clouds." The same campaign included notices on bulletin boards at three air spotter stations which reached over 500 families, announcements in all bars, tap rooms, clubs, and tie-in with bus drivers to endorse and plug the picture in surrounding towns.

Street Dancing Bally

Literal dancing in the streets helped exploit "We Were Dancing" for Will Crull, at Loew's, in Nashville. A boy and girl, wearing evening clothes, danced at the city's busiest intersections, to music from a portable radio. The couple carried a sign plugging the film.

Makemson's Bowling Tieup

Booking two shorts called "Better Bowling" and "Ten Pin Parade," John Makemson at Schine's Van Wert, in Van Wert, Ohio, tied up with local bowling alley which agreed to pay for the entire cost and distribution of 2,000 heralds. In connection with the tieup, John arranged a "Schine Sweepsteak" at the alley the week preceding playdates with the high man and woman on certain days of bowling being awarded with guest tickets which were good during the showing of the shorts. The bowling alley ran a co-op ad in local daily, spotted a 40 by 60 and plugged the event to customers.

Local Violinists Sought By Longo for "To Be"

Highlight of Joe Longo's "To Be or Not To Be" campaign at Loew's State, in Boston was a radio contest which was launched by the insertion of an ad in the classified section of the local paper seeking violinists to participate in a competitive contest, entrants playing Jack Benny's favorite tune, "The Bee." Winners were given prizes and a picture was taken of the group, which resulted in a promotion story with art in the local papers. Another newspaper angle offered cash and guest ticket prizes to readers who phoned in news tips during the week.

For his opening of "Shanghai Gesture" Longo held a Chinese Night at which the local Mayor of Chinatown and other prominent Chinese were invited. A special luncheon was arranged for the press at a popular Chinese Restaurant which was followed by a screening of the picture. While for "Johnny Eager" the Round Tabler awarded a trophy, compliments of Lana Turner, to the photogenic queen, so selected by the Boston Press Photographers Association. This was good for art and stories in the paper.

OBITUARIES

Morris Gest, Producer of "Miracle," Dies

Morris Gest, producer of spectacles, whose supreme achievement was "The Miracle" in 1924, died of pneumonia last Saturday at Midtown Hospital, New York. He was 61.

Born in Vilna, Russia, Mr. Gest came to this country when he was eight. He drove a camel in the "Street of Paris" at the Buffalo Exposition of 1901. Next year he landed in New York as a ticket scalper outside David Belasco's theatre. Mr. Belasco's manager, Ben Roeder, was impressed by Mr. Gest's zeal and introduced him to Oscar Hammerstein, then a vaudeville manager. Mr. Hammerstein sent Mr. Gest to Europe as his agent in obtaining attractions. In 1906 Mr. Gest formed a partnership with F. Ray Comstock with whom he produced more than 50 plays. They persuaded the noted actress Eleanora Duse to cross the Atlantic and appear in five plays. In association with Mr. Hammerstein, Mr. Gest brought Mary Garden to her first real American success. He induced Geraldine Farrar to enter motion pictures, and he undertook the presentation of "The Thief of Bagdad" for Douglas Fairbanks.

Meanwhile, Mr. Gest had seen the Russian ballets in Paris, and in 1911 he imported the stars and corps of the Diaghileff Ballet Russe. Their success prompted him to bring over the Chauve-Souris in 1922 and the Moscow Art Theatre in 1923.

Converted Theatre into Cathedral

Mr. Gest brought "The Miracle" to New York in January, 1924. He had seen this lengthy pantomime in Germany, where it had been produced by Max Reinhardt. Mr. Gest took a lease on the old Century theatre and transformed it into an old Rhineland cathedral, with vaulted ceilings, columns, pipe organs, stained glass windows and altars. The initial outlay was over $600,000.

The last show to bear his name on Broadway was "Lady Precious Stream" in 1936. Previous to that he had produced "The Wonder Bar" with Al Jolson. His last excursion into show business was his midget show, "Little Miracle Town" at the New York World's Fair.

Mr. Gest, whose real name was Moses Gershonovitch, married Reina Victoria Belasco, daughter of the late David Belasco, in 1911.

Funeral services were held Monday in Central Synagogue, New York.

I Married an Angel

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

MacDonald-Eddy Musical

Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy are back at their singing, this time amid magnificence and splendor such as may be displayed on the screen with less frequency during the period of pressures, in this version of the Richard Rodgers-Lorenz Hart play which made Broadway history a season or so ago. It is a glamor production in all particulars and assuredly a feast for eyes and ears of the MacDonald-Eddy followers.

With production of this film Hunt Stromberg, Metro-Golden-Mayer's Number One producer according to Fame statistics, was winding up a studio affiliation of some fifteen years and he chose to do it in the grand manner. Cost figures are not available, but only "Marie Antoinette" and "The Great Ziegfeld" stand out in memory as pictures from his hand comparing with this one in point of grandeur. It may be written for the record books, regardless of ultimate eventuations as regards gate receipts, that Producer Stromberg indulged in no skimping of budget or effort on his last number for Leo.

What all this magnificence will turn out to be worth in terms of dollars and cents collected from the ultimate consumers is something of a question.

The Budapest and Paris of an era when bankers and their associates exulted in ermined frivolities unshadowed by portent of that which has come to them are the scenes of the excitements and enticements depicted with extravagance and sophistication such as may not have prevailed even there even then.

The angel of the title is represented as an angel in all but fact, the major portion of the picture constituting a dream in which a playboy capitalist experiences matrimony and other adventures with the heavenly visitor, and there are known to reside in this country a number of persons who do not fancy the representation of angels as characters in a comedy.

A large number of the players in the cast are types selected for their homeliness, their girth, their physical inappropriateness for the fine raiment and exalted station assigned them, and the camera dwells upon these variations from the norm with that persistency of closeup which Continental directors and producers used to use by way of dramatizing ugliness for the gratification of the smug.

But the MacDonald-Eddy singing is, of course, the factor of prime importance in any MacDonald-Eddy picture, from the consumer's point of view, and there is plenty of it in this one. Their songs are the Rodgers-Hart songs, with added lyrics by Bob Wright and Chet Forrest, and their score is by Herbert Stothart and a thing of beauty in itself.

Direction is by Major W. S. Van Dyke II, and it reflects a study and application to detail and whole which makes every inch of film count.

Anita Loos wrote the screenplay, spicing it a bit while keeping it flowing gracefully along its appointed way to a foreseen conclusion.

Binnie Barnes, Reginald Owen and Edward Everett Horton are standouts in a supporting cast as large as it is meticulously selected.

Previewed at the Village theatre, Westwood, a college community, where the singing received applause and much of the comedy eliciting laughter, just a little of it—as when the angel discovers on the morning after her wedding night that she's lost her wings—the guffaw variety.—William R. Weaver.

Once Upon a Thursday

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy

A blithe comedy whose situations make for universal entertainment, "Once Upon a Thursday" presents a story novel and amusing in treatment, hilarious in enactment. The socialite colony of a Long Island suburb is agog when a gossip column carries a line that one of the colony's maids has written a novel about the family for which she works. The matrons organize to ferret out the writer; the maids organize for their own protection.

Into this bustle is thrust a young explorer who brings his fiancee to meet his family, only to discover that the maid whom he had married secretly several years previously has not obtained her divorce and is still working for his mother.

The complications come to a climax at the betrothal announcement party, when all identities are exposed.

Marsha Hunt as the maid, Richard Carlson as the scion of the socialite family; Marjorie Main, Virginia Weidler, Spring Byington and Allyn Joslyn head a competent cast.

The original story and screenplay by Isobel Lennart and Lee Gold is a gem of cinema writing. Direction by Jules Dassin, a new director at MGM, was tip top, comedy and romance being neatly spaced. Irving Starr was the producer.

Previewed at the Westwood Village Theatre, Westwood, to an audience that roared, chuckled and guffawed.—Vance King.

Pacific Rendezvous

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Three Days in the Navy

A mixture of humor, romance, spies and the Navy carries Lee Bowman from straight comedy roles to the part of romantic hero. The success of the experiment, despite Bowman's antics and the presence of talented Mona Maris, will remain in doubt for lack of substantial evidence.

Lieutenant Bowman of the Navy has three days to break an enemy cipher and recover the code book stolen from a U. S. Navy officer. The time limit on the first task has been set by a personal choice to return to active duty with the next group of recruits. The second must be accomplished to save a Pacific convoy from destruction by the Japanese. In the fast pace set by Director George Sidney both are summarily handled, notwithstanding the intrigue of Mona Maris on behalf of the spy ring and the brainless interference of Jean Rogers on behalf of romance.

Producer B. F. Zeidman has taken advantage of the essential drama of the times and the speed with which things move for a hastily fashioned drama with little semblance of reality. The comedy, however, provides sufficient entertainment to keep the audience amused.

Seen at a New York projection room where a small audience laughed at more than the conscious humor.—E. A. Cunningham.

The Day Will Dawn

(Soskin - General Film)

War Drama with Newspaper Theme

Free France, the Free Dutch, Belgium under the Nazi yoke, have all been tackled by British producers. Now it is Paul Soskin's turn to dramatize the heroism and the moral grandeur of Norway and its people. "The Day Will Dawn" should take its place at once with "The Invaders" and "The Foreman Went to France" as one of the most notable contributions made by the British industry since the war. Exacting critics may carp about its patterned accents, in relation to U. S. appeal. Its subject should appeal anywhere. In Britain, with its title, its topical subject matter, and its names, it should provoke widespread word-of-mouth publicity to add to the showmen's salesmanship.

Frank Owen, erstwhile editor of London's Evening Standard, vividly and persuasively wrote the story in terms of a sports writer turned war correspondent and British liaison in Norway, who escapes during the Nazi invasion, and returns to his friends in the Fiord to aid the British in bombing a U-boat nest. There is a love element, handled by director Harold French with consummate delicacy, naval engagements, Nazi jackbootery, Norwegian revolt and a final Commando raid. Something happens all the time, and it is generally exciting or dramatic.

The Norway scenes are entirely convincing in their setting and treatment, and the newspaper flavour has never been equalled in its accuracy and tang. The dialogue here—as elsewhere—is delectable.

Hugh Williams as the reporter has done no better work, and Deborah Kerr's delicacy of portrayal, her sensibility and her charm, will set her star shining high. Ralph Richardson makes all too brief an appearance as a war correspondent. Griffiths Jones is a feasible Nazi agent and Finlay Currie a human Norwegian skipper.

Harold French has done a grand directorial job and his film is both a moving propaganda tribute and rousing entertainment. The role of Terence Rattigan and Anatole de Grunwald in writing the screen play was filled brilliantly.

Shown in London to a mixed audience of public and press, the film gripped, with obvious passages of tensity, and provoked bursts of applause in its more actionful sequences.—AUBREY FLANAGAN

WINNING YOUR WINGS

This recruiting subject for the Army Air Force stars one of Hollywood's most popular actors, now a lieutenant—James Stewart, who enlisted as a private and came up the hard way. It is therefore with a sense of "He knows what he is talking about" that the young men of America—men from 18 to 26—will greet this subject when it plays in the nation's theatres. The Army Air Force seeks to enlist 2,000,000 men for flight and ground duties and this subject is an excellent method of recruitment. In addition it's entertaining. Warner Bros. produced the subject, which will be released by the War Activities Committee through Warner exchanges.—R. A. W.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING

MR. GARDENIA JONES

Boasting a cast as big as many a feature, this short subject is to be shown in every theatre in the country within the next few weeks. Ronald Reagan, Laraine Day, Charles Winninger and Fay Bainter head the cast. George B. Seitz directed, and Carey Wilson wrote the story. It depicts a family whose son is in the Army—the son is shown trying to amuse himself in a small Army post town without facilities. Later, the U. S. O. brightens the soldiers' lives and several of its activities graphically illustrate this. United Artists is handling the distribution of this subject for the War Activities Committee. One thousand prints have been made so that every theatre may show the film in connection with the current U. S. O. drive.—R. A. W.

Fighting Bill Fargo

Fast Western

Johnny Mack Brown is here cast in as difficult a situation as a western hero may be: a parolee, unable to tote a gun. But, eventually outraged by the efforts of criminal opponents to frame him, he packs one to fight "guns with guns."

He is the man returned from a jail term for a framed charge, and finding the home town in control of the crooked real estate agent, James Blaine; the sheriff, Kenneth Harlan; the agent's strong-arm man, Ted Adams, and the weak-willed publisher, Earl Hodgins.

The good element's candidate is killed by Adams, protected by Harlan. Hodgins then becomes candidate. When Brown and associates find Hodgins conniving with the bad ones, they evict him from his newspaper post. Adams then kills Hodgins, signing a confession that he had framed Johnny's father, and outlining misdeeds with Adams, Blaine, and Harlan. Johnny is accused, forced to flee.

But Fuzzy Knight, printer's devil, forever fiddling with photography, never securing a picture, inadvertently brings victory for justice. For Hodgins, being murdered by Adams, pressed his foot on a camera release and the picture, published in Johnny's newspaper, proves his innocence. The final rout is accomplished by a battle of guns and fists.

Knight's comedy is good, except where it occurs during tension. Definitely an interruption to the action, is the Eddie Dean singing trio. Except for these, Ray Taylor, director, has kept the picture moving rapidly; and the original story by Paul Franklin has some novel turns.

Reviewed in the New York Theatre, to a sparse early Friday evening audience, mostly male, whose audible appreciation was reserved for the antics of Fuzzy Knight.—FLOYD E. STONE.

Meet the Stewarts

(Columbia)

Domestic Comedy

Producer Robert Sparks and Director Alfred W. Green sidetracked the war and its worries to turn out here a pleasant little picture about a couple of newlyweds who have trouble in living inside their budget but manage, after a separation, to do so.

The screenplay by Karen DeWolf, from a story by Elizabeth Dunn, sprinkles the running time with smiles and chuckles rather than guffaws and sets neither high nor low mark for success in the field of domestic comedy.

William Holden portrays with benefit of understatement the working man who marries a rich girl, played by Frances Dee, under an agreement binding her to live within his income. She tries hard, makes mistakes, leaves him in a tiff, makes her own way as a wage earner thereafter and, at length, rejoins him. Quite a number of amusing incidents transpire while this is going on.

Previewed at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood, where a midweek audience indicated satisfaction by chuckles and occasional outright laughs.—W. R. W.

The picture traces the rise of the Four Cohans to one of the great vaudeville acts in the country, with George, his mother, father and sister. It portrays Cohan's successes in musical shows, his romance with Mary (Joan Leslie) and his contribution to the last war. The climax comes with the production of Cohan's most recent musical drama "I'd Rather Be Right" and the presentation to him of the Congressional Medal of Honor by the President of the United States. It is the story of a man, a family, a profession and a nation.

THROUGH DIFFERENT EYES (20th Century-Fox)

Murder Mystery

PRODUCER: Sol M. Wurtzel. Directed by Thomas Z. Loring.

PLAYERS: Frank Craven, Mary Howard, June Walker, Donald Woods, Vivian Blaine, George Holmes, Jerome Cowan, Charles Lane, James Flavin.

SYNOPSIS

Frank Craven, District Attorney, is lecturing on the famous Gardner murder case in which Harry Beach (George Holmes) was convicted and sentenced to hang. The murdered man's wife (Mary Howard) had asked him for a divorce so that she might marry Ted Farnsworth (Donald Woods). Both were at the lodge where Gardner was shot, as was his secretary, Beach, and both confess to the crime to shield each other. But Beach disappears suspiciously, and when found, tells a story of having been with Gardner at the shooting. A man he did not recognize fired the shot and escaped in a car he did not see. The story is too flimsy and Beach is convicted. But Craven's wife Margie (June Walker) is not satisfied. Delaying the man's execution by a ruse, she outwits the real killer who confesses.

IT HAPPENED IN FLATBUSH (20th Century-Fox)

Baseball Romance

PRODUCER: Walter Morosco. Directed by Ray McCarey.

PLAYERS: Lloyd Nolan, Carole Landis, Sara Allgood, William Frawley, Robert Armstrong, Jane Darwell, George Holmes, Scotty Beckett.

SYNOPSIS

In a fictional, but possible, story of a Brooklyn ball team, all the drama and fanatic enthusiasm of the players and their followers is brought to the screen. The plot centers around the new manager, Maguire (Lloyd Nolan) and his attempts to wipe out his past record of failure as well as to build up the Brooklyn team. He faces the enmity of sports writers who had driven him from the game some years ago and the indifference of the stockholders when the owner who hired him dies. He finally wins over the niece (Carole Landis) to baseball and himself. After a poor start without players the team takes a sudden and steady rise, and, in a final thrilling game, captures the pennant.

Advance Synopses and Information

THE MAGNIFICENT DOPE
(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy

PRODUCER: William Perlberg. Directed by Walter Lang.

PLAYERS: Henry Fonda, Lynn Bari, Don Ameche, Edward Everett Horton.

SYNOPSIS

The Dawson Success Institute needs a new exploitation stunt. Dwight Dawson (Don Ameche) and his sweetheart, Claire Harris (Lynn Bari) start a contest to find the man least likely to succeed. The winner is Tad Page (Henry Fonda) who spends his days relaxing and hoping for a fire engine. Given a course in the school he would have backed out if it had not been for his interest in Claire. On graduation he must land a job, which is fixed for him by Dawson, and show definite success. The job is selling insurance, and the prospect chosen is a man with high blood pressure. Tad's relaxing system works and the contract is signed. Claire loses respect for Dawson on learning the tricks he has been trying to put over on Tad. When the young man buys his fire engine she is riding in the front.

MISS ANNIE ROONEY
(UA-Small)

Drama

PRODUCER: Edward Small. Directed by Edwin L. Marin.

PLAYERS: Shirley Temple, William Gargan, Guy Kibbee, Dickie Moore, Peggy Ryan, Roland DuPree, Gloria Holden, Jonathan Hale.

SYNOPSIS

Shirley, a jitterbug with a weakness for good literature, lives with her father (William Gargan), an unsuccessful inventor, and her grandfather (Guy Kibbee), whose police pension provides the only income. She meets Marty White (Dickie Moore), the son of a socially prominent family, with whom she shares a common interest in books. At his sixteenth birthday party, Shirley receives a frigid reception from his family but wins over his friends with rug-cutting lessons. Her father interrupts the party, demanding that the boy's father consider his rubber formula. The mess explodes on the living-room floor, and Shirley and her father leave dejectedly. At home the bills are mounting but Mr. Rooney has not lost faith in his invention. At the crucial moment word from the laboratory confirms his belief, and a new company, White & Rooney, is established, to the delight of Shirley and Marty.

TEN GENTLEMEN FROM WEST POINT
(20th Century-Fox)

Historical Drama

PRODUCER: William Perlberg. Directed by Henry Hathaway.

PLAYERS: George Montgomery, Maureen O'Hara, John Sutton, Laird Cregar, John Shepperd, Victor Francen, Harry Davenport.

SYNOPSIS

The story is set in the early days of the Military Academy at West Point when Chief Tecumseh was threatening from the hills. A new appropriation from Congress has revived the institution and among the fresh cadets are Howart Shelton (John Payne) of a fine Washington family; Dawson (George Montgomery), a Kentucky backswoodsman, and Shippen (O. S. Whitehead). The cadets are assigned to a group of Bombardiers to be whipped into shape, and are roughly treated. A letter of complaint reaches Congress, and the boys, refusing to confess authorship, are cruelly punished. Only ten stay on, including Shelton and Dawson who are unfriendly rivals for the same girl (Maureen O'Hara). But all this is forgotten when the Indian Chief goes on the warpath. In a pitched battle Dawson is wounded. The girl rushes to his side, and they set out for frontier land in the west when he recovers.

SWEETHEART OF THE FLEET
(Columbia)

Comedy

PRODUCER: Jack Fier. Directed by Charles Barton.

PLAYERS: Joan Davis, Jinx Falkenburg, Joan Woodbury, Blanche Stewart, Elvia Allman.

SYNOPSIS

Phoebe Weyms plans an advertising stunt to impress her boss, who has refused to recognize that she is in love with him. Her idea is to present the "Blind Date Girls," radio singers, at a large Navy recruiting rally. The Navy reacts enthusiastically before the boss informs Phoebe that they are homely girls who refuse personal appearances. Undaunted, Phoebe proposes a substitution of two models—with the real Bella and Donna singing behind the curtain. The latter, supposedly voice coaches, accompany the girls and arouse the interest of two sailors who elope with them on the night of the rally. The scheme explodes and the hoax is confessed, but the Navy willingly accepts the substitutes and Phoebe has attracted the attention of her boss.

RIDERS OF THE NORTHLAND
(Columbia)

Western

PRODUCER: Jack Fier. Directed by William Berke.

PLAYERS: Charles Starrett, Russell Hayden, Shirley Patterson, Cliff Edwards, Bobby Larsen.

SYNOPSIS

Charles Starrett and Russell Hayden are Texas Rangers assigned to government investigation in Alaska. A government man has been killed and information is being radioed off shore to the enemy. The Rangers pick up clues after a ranch is set afire and set out after the Larsen gang. A small boy stumbles upon information and is killed. Suspicion falls on the Rangers but they clear themselves and set a trap for the outlaws. While Hayden acts as decoy to draw off the men, Starrett stampedes cattle through their hide-out.
